KANSAS CITY, MO.

The week following New Year was a slow one with the trade, but Kansas City seems to have escaped the post-holiday dullness with more celerity than many of the other cities lately. Business has been as good as could have been expected, and everybody reports having had a fair average.

There have been a few large decorations, but the heavy quantity of funeral work is what moved the stock. Miss Dalley reports having had twelve different funerals last Tuesday.

The long spell of bright weather has been broken at last by a heavy fall of snow. As the snowfall has been very general in this locality, stiffening of prices may be expected.

Arthur Newell and Sam Murray have been indulging in a hunting trip. They went to Lexington, Mo., and expect some fine sport later in the week. Mr. Newell and a party of friends crossed the border into Kansas and bagged eighty rabbits.

Some fine carnations are to be seen at Rock's, which were grown at the Rock-Heite establishment. Owing to inability to secure competent help and his large Walnut street business requiring his entire attention Mr. Rock has closed his Eleventh street store.

MADISON, N. J.

The annual dinner of the Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society materialized the evening of January 8, the routine business including the installation of officers for 1902 as follows: President, E. Reagan; vice president, C. H. Totty; treasurer, William Charlton; secretary, C. H. Atkins; executive committee, A. H. Herrington, William Duckham, H. W. Gibbons, J. R. Mitchell.

Mr. Duckham has just recovered from a severe attack of grip. His successor, Mr. Reagan, said many commendatory things of the retiring president and made an excellent practical speech to the members.

The society is in a flourishing condition, and all its fifty-three members must have been present at this affair, together with a goodly lot of visitors. Masonic Hall was well filled. The dinner was elaborate and the literary programme chaste and varied. Mr. William Duckham presided. Letters of regret were read from Messrs. P. O'Mara, John Young, Alex Wallace, J. W. Clucas and J. I. Donlan. Messrs. Withers, Butterfield and Shaw came down from New York under the chaperonage of J. P. Cleary to enjoy the fraternal greetings of this hospitable society. "The Bard," as usual, wrote a "pome" for the banquet on the train coming down. A.

Toledo, O.—The Henry Phillips Seed Co., of this city, has been awarded an additional seed contract by the United States government, which calls for 10,000 packages of lawn grass seed. The original contract called for upward of 40,000,000 packages of various seeds.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Meeting of the State Association.

The annual meeting of the State Florists' Association took place at the state house on January 14, with President J. A. E. Haugh in the chair. The attendance was smaller than usual at these annual meetings, especially the out of town portion of the society. But what was lacking in number was fully made up by the unusual interest shown in the proceedings. President Haugh's address was brimfull of good sense and humor and kept the audience in good humor throughout its deliverance. After the routine business was disposed of the election of officers for the ensuing year was taken up with the following results: President Haugh was re-elected to serve a third term in that capacity. John Hartje was elected first vice president and John Bertermann second vice president. H. Junge was elected secretary to succeed R. A. McKeand, and J. Heidenreich succeeds T. Huntington as treasurer. In the evening President Haugh announced the following executive committee: E. G. Hill, of Richmond; Fred Dorner, of Lafayette; A. F. J. Baur, Ed Bertermann and H. W. Rieman, of this city.

Mr. Vernon D. Grave, Mrs. E. T. Grave, of Richmond, and Mr. Norwood Carnes, of Muncie, were elected to membership in the society.

There was a very nice exhibition in connection with the meeting, and in quality it was away up, all the stock shown being in extra fine condition. The E. G. Hill Co. had five vases of carnation blooms of the newer sorts, among which a bunch of the great Adonis stood out head and shoulders above everything else. Such blooms as those would never have to look long for a buyer, and we understand that it is not a hard variety to grow. Their new striped variety named Gaiety is a very nice thing in the fancy class. Lorna showed up fine as a fancy white. Roosevelt looked very pretty, but we failed to see the teeth and eyeglasses. A vase of Cressbrook looked very fine, and this variety will surely become a standard variety.

Stuart & Haugh had a fine vase of Avondale, their pink sport of Armazindy. They also had some good White Cloud and America, besides a vase of Bridesmaid and another of Bride and Golden Gate, which were very good.

H. W. Rieman had some fine plants of Primula obconica of an improved strain, some nice plants of cyclamen and Cypripedium insigne; also some good blooms of Mrs. Lawson and three seedlings of merit.

Bertermann Bros. had a collection of plants and cut blooms, among which a pan of lily of the valley attracted attention by its fine stems.

Baur & Smith showed how they can grow Crocker carnation, which no one else around seems able to do. The same firm also showed a vase of the new Daybreak colored variety Elma, which were very much admired. All the above were given honorable mention.

The out-of-town visitors were E. G. Hill, J. A. Evans and Vernon Grave, of Richmond; J. S. Stuart and J. A. E. Haugh, of Anderson, and Herbert Heller, of New Castle. We wondered where were our old friends W. W. Coles and Ed Bissell, who hardly ever miss any of the annual meetings.

We were very sorry that we missed

The Market.

The market was rather one sided during the past week. Everything in roses was cleaned up daily, but it was hard work trying to get January prices on carnations, especially colored sorts. Locally trade was quiet, but shipping business consumed most of the stock. The call for violets is extremely light, a peculiar condition with such favorable weather for the use of them and no large quantities in the market. There are many hard luck stories among the violet growers around here as very few had any success with them this season, some of them losing their entire stock. Romans and Paper Whites are stickers; even plenty of funeral work don't seem to budge them much. The prices realized hardly warrant a grower to invest in the bulbs, especially if reports be true of another advance in Romans next season.

Notes.

C. C. Pollworth, W. A. Kennedy and Nic Zweifel expect to attend the Carnation Society meeting at Indianapolis.

The Baumgarten Floral Co. have entirely remodeled the interior of their store, making it one of the most attractive flower stores in the city.

The announcement of the death of Walter Helfron came as a sudden shock to his friends in the trade here and regrets are expressed on all sides at his sudden demise right in the prime of life.

The Bloomers have stopped training and are now ready for the Chicago bowlers and their mascots and rooters when they arrive next Saturday. The mayor was also notified so as to prevent any official attempts to stop the game. The Exposition building, where it is expected most of the bowling will be done, has been enlarged for the occasion. Chicago and Milwaukee bands will furnish the music. INCOG.

ERIE, PA.

Mr. Vern L. Schluraff has sold a half interest in his greenhouses (formerly owned by Titus Berst) to Mr. G. Scott Snyder, and the firm will be known as G. Scott Snyder & Co., with greenhouses at corner Twentieth and Poplar streets. Mr. V. L. Schluraff is the son of Mr. G. R. Schluraff, of the Schluraff Floral Co., and Mr. Snyder has been in the employ of the Schluraff Floral Co. for several years.

Both are young and energetic and will no doubt make their business a success. They have nearly 14,000 square feet of glass and will the coming summer rebuild and enlarge one house.

We are advised that Mr. Henry W. Gibbons has sold all his interest in the Henry W. Gibbons Co. and has no further connection therewith. He will continue in business personally at the old address, 136 Liberty street, New York.

The Mrs. E. A. Nelson

Bids fair to become the commercial standard pink carnation. It is a healthy grower, a free and continuous bloomer, and it is sure to thrive wherever grown.

The following letter from Mr. Wm. Scott (who, by the by, needs no introduction), speaks for itself:

BUFFALO, December 7th, 1901.

S. S. SKIDELSKY. Dear Sir:—Of the 25 plants of Mrs. Nelson Carnation which you sent me last spring 24 were put on the bench last August. It is in my opinion a splendid variety. A fine habit and most vigorous growth. A flower of large size, full and perfect form and its color most attractive. At first you would think it a much magnified Scott, but when compared it has none of the blue tint of the old favorite, but is a pure bright pink. It was quick to send up good stems and has every promise of being a free and continuous bloomer. If it suits every soil as it does this it is going to be a most desirable standard variety.

Very truly yours, WILLIAM SCOTT.

Prices—Per doz., $2.50; 25, $3.50; 50, $6.00; 100, $10.00; 1000, $80.00.

250 go at 1000 rate. Send for descriptive circular.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Geraniums.

As I remarked last week, this is no time to have a foot of your propagating bed idle. If you have cuttings of the variegated or bronze or tricolor geraniums now is a good time to put them in the sand, and there are months enough ahead to grow a good plant. The zonale type we much prefer to pot at once when time into a 2-inch pot, for you need not lose 5 per cent that way, and they make a much better plant than when propagated in the sand, and disturbed as they have to be when rooted. But the types mentioned above do not root in the soil and pot as well and surely as in the sand.

We also find the popular rose leaf and the variegated Lady Plymouth and other scented geraniums more satisfactory rooted in the propagating bed. The little, compact growing, variegated Mme. Salleroi increases in favor every year. It makes a splendid edging to any bed where the color will harmonize, and I don't know but what white and green will harmonize with anything. I told you not to put any cuttings of this variety in the sand in the fall, but to lift up some of the plants from the flower garden and keep in pots in a cool house. Now is a good time to pull them to pieces for propagating, and they root most easily. You don't want large, soft grown plants of this useful variety. Compact, little plants in 3-inch pots are all that is desired at bedding out time. Put them now in the sand.

Miscellaneous Plants.

There is abundant room for exercise of judgment in the time and quantity to propagate of many of our common but useful plants, and a weakness that I have noticed with many beginners is to propagate large quantities of some plants for the only reason "that they rooted so quickly and nicely and it was a pleasure to see them grow." Another mistake often made is that you propagate too freely of several free growing, soft wooded plants. You will find your benches full of plants in April that you cannot afford to shift again, and without more space and more soil by selling time they are worn out and not half as desirable plants as those propagated two months later, and grown quickly and healthily on. On the other hand, don't be too confident and careless and say, Oh, there is lots of time to propagate this or that, unless you are sure you have plenty of stock to propagate from.

Begin now to work up your stock of coleus and don't forget that for your orders for bedding you want 97 out of every 100 to consist of Verschaffeltii and Golden Bedder, and the other three whatever old Bill Jones prefers. Mealy bug has of late years been a terrible nuisance on coleus. If there is a chance to clean them thoroughly it is when you are making the cuttings.

Heliotrope is one of the cheap plants that if pot bound gets shabby and rusty, but it is time to put in some.

Salvia splendens and its improved forms is also better not propagated too early, but if your stock is not large, begin.

Lemon verbena you never have too large, and they root well now from the young shoots of plants started into growth a few weeks ago.

Lantana is not a very quick grower and needs propagating early.

It is hardly necessary to say much about chrysanthemums. If you could propagate all your stock of these in the month of May it would be just the thing, but you don't have stock enough to do that, so you have to begin earlier. Any variety that you are short of should be handled at once, but if you have abundance of stock then defer propagating until March.

The common white pyrethrum (feverfew) quickly grows useless if propagated too early and kept in ordinary greenhouse temperature, but does not multiply very quickly, so it's well to begin now.

This is about as late as you can put in fuchsia cuttings and make really good thrifty plants of any size by the month of May, so propagate all you want of these now or within a week or two.

There are two very common lowly little plants that we never have enough of, at any rate in the right condition. One is Lobelia erinus and gracilis and the other the double form of sweet alyssum. The sweet alyssum is a bedding plant, but we use it mostly for veranda boxes and vases. The lobelia is no bedding plant, and only those who don't know our climate would use it for that purpose, but it is a pretty plant for vases, boxes and baskets. Both of these plants should be propagated now freely, for it takes some months to grow a plant large enough to be effective when used, which is what we want.

There are other plants not necessary for me to mention, but which will appeal to you as now wanting to be increased, and perhaps it's best to be on the safe side and be in time, but use judgment and don't get loaded up with fast growing stuff like ageratum and heliotrope, to be only good to throw away before planting time.

Seeds.

It is early yet for the great majority of seeds, but there are a few that should be sown without delay.

Sow cannas. The seedlings make splendid plants and mostly come true from seed. If you buy seed saved from Tarrytown they would produce Tarrytown, but you are not likely to get seeds of that wonderful variety. Sow early and you will have strong plants ready to bloom by middle of May.

Verbena should now be sown, and Centaurea gymnocarpa. Lophospermum, you want good big vines and can't get them too early.

Now there is a lot of so-called hardy annuals, etc., that it is much too early to sow and would be only in your way. I allude to balsams, asters, zinnias, marigolds, etc.

Cannas.

Have you looked over your canna roots of late? Beneath a bench where very little drip occurs ours are doing well, but it is wise to look them over, and if the eyes are too active and showing growth just move the plants along. If there is any variety you are short of you can cut up and start at once, and before spring you can divide again, but if you have plenty of any variety it is several weeks before you need start them.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

LILY OF THE VALLEY.

An inquiry reaches me from a grower whom we will call "E. B.," asking the following: "How long valley must be kept in cold storage to make the best stock?"

I have quoted the wording of the inquiry precisely as it was received, and it is rather ambiguous. By "stock" is doubtless meant flowers, and I take it that at this time of year is meant how many weeks from time of receiving the imported stock before you can begin to force. If it was meant how many weeks of cold storage in summer months should elapse before forcing the answer would be simple, because it is easier to keep the roots in good condition up to July than it is to November.

The valley roots usually arrive from 10th to 15th of November. If immediately unpacked, placed in boxes of earth, a little soil or moss between each bunch of 25, and an inch of earth over the pips, then place the boxes out of doors, protecting them from heavy rains. Those we don't intend to force before March and April we would cover with 2 or 3 inches of leaves or stable litter. On January 1 and thereabouts you can bring in the first batch, and if the pips are what they should be and your conditions for forcing are correct, you will be certain to get 90 per cent of good flowers, as good a spike of flowers as at any time of year excepting that the foliage is a little shy. Every succeeding batch will give you more leaves.

I have put the date January 1 as a good safe date, because I remember some 12 years ago that I had a thousand pips forced for New Year's and not more than 25 per cent were a failure, but we have not always been so successful as that at such an early date, but when brought in from outside about January 1 there is no fear of failure.

I should add that when unpacking we dip the bunches for a moment or two in a tub of water, then the soil in which you pack the bunches need not be watered. Whether the pips should be frozen before being forced is something I cannot answer. My opinion is that it is not essential. Although it is a perfectly hardy plant, in the unnatural treatment we subject them to no very hard freezing should be allowed, that is certain, and whether any is desirable I doubt.

I have said nothing about their treatment while forcing because that is not the question, although on that depends everything.

W. S.

ROSE NOTES.

Seasonable Hints.

When repotting from 2-inch to 2½-inch pots there is no necessity for drainage, as the pot will absorb all the superfluous moisture. As the shift is so small, the soil, in order to get it equally around the ball, will require to be fine; passing it through a half-inch screen will make it about right. The ball should not be broken—only a little of the surface soil and the sharp edges rubbed off—and placed at the same depth in the pot as before. Firm the soil equally well all around the ball and water thoroughly. In order to keep the plants stocky the temperature should remain at 56 or 58 degrees at night, running up to 70 degrees during sunshine. Give plenty of ventilation on all favorable occasions.

Every morning the benches should be carefully examined before watering, as the pots are sure to dry out unevenly, and those plants which are too dry should be gone over individually with the hose previous to the general watering and syringing. The main object should be to keep all the plants in a uniform, vigorous condition, and any neglect in this matter will tend to produce many stunted plants. Meteors, Perles and Beauties at this season will make more rapid growth in a temperature of 60 degrees, which will necessitate increased supplies of water; but as there is ample time from now till June to grow good plants, the lower temperature is preferable, as the slower growth produces more stocky plants, which, when planted in the bench, start more freely. As the plants increase in size they ought to be given more room on the bench. This can be easily effected by removing every third row, thus allowing a free circulation of air among the leaves and also facilitating syringing.

Dusting the leaves with flowers of sulphur once a week will help to ward off mildew.

If the cutting bench has to be used for a second batch it is wiser to throw out the old sand and use fresh, thus minimizing the danger of fungoid attacks.

Ribes.

LIME AND PARIS GREEN.

Please state in the Review that adding a lump of unslaked lime the size of a hickory nut to each three gallons of any mixture of paris green will prevent injury to any foliage by the mixture. This should be generally known, but I fear it is not. John Thorpe.

CARNATIONS.

A House at 40 Degrees.

Please tell me the best white, pink and scarlet carnations to grow in a house that goes as low as 40 degrees a few nights during the winter. C. V. K.

To begin with, I want to say to C. V. K. that a house that drops to 40 degrees whenever the weather is severe is not a good house to grow carnations in. There are few, if any, varieties that will stand many nights of 40 degrees without bursting a large percentage of the calyxes. The proper thing for him to do is to put in about one or two more heating pipes so he can keep the temperature up to at least 48 or 50 degrees on the coldest nights. If he can not do this the next best thing is to select varieties that will do well in a moderately low temperature without bursting, and they would be about as follows: White Cloud for white among the standard varieties, or Lorna among the newer sorts. Mrs. Joost from the older pinks and Dorothy out of the new ones. America as a scarlet. Crane is generally supposed to have a strong calyx, and so it has, but I have seen many bursted ones, while on the other hand I have not had a single bursted calyx on America and our plants went through a pretty severe test just before last Christmas.

New Pink Carnation Cressbrook, as Exhibited at Chicago Last Week.

Mice in Carnation Houses.

Another grower sends us a carnation bloom which was gnawed off the stem just below the bloom and asks what did it. I think I can say positively that it was done by a mouse. They climb up the stem and gnaw through the stems just below the bloom, allowing the bloom to drop to the ground where they gnaw their way through to the calyx and into the seed pod in order to get at the young tender seed, of which they seem very fond. Of course they work at night and we are troubled most when it is severely cold outside, which drives them to the greenhouses. Last winter we lost many blooms, while we were trying everything we could think of to rid the houses of them. They would work all around a piece of cheese that had a little poison of some kind on it without ever touching it. The last thing we tried was a preparation known as "Stearn's electric paste," and it soon cleared the houses of the pest.

American Carnation Society.

The annual meeting of the American Carnation Society is only a little over three weeks away now, and we hope to see the largest attendance in the history of the society. It will pay you well to come even if you have no new seedling to show, and if you have one to show this will be the time and the place to show it and to compare it with the many fine varieties, both new and old, with which it will have to contend for popular favor. If it is as fine as you think it is you certainly can do nothing better than to show it to the foremost carnation growers of the whole country, as you will later have to depend on them to buy the stock you will have to offer. On the other hand, if you are rating it higher than its merits would warrant then there is no better place for you to find out where it stands than right here in the exhibition hall among the really good ones.

Many a grower has a pet seedling or two which he imagines away ahead of the times without any real reason for it. The longer he grows them the better he likes them, and in fact he loves them so that he cannot see a single fault in them. Those are the varieties that usually cause so much disappointment among the novelty buyers. The expert hybridist is not so likely to make such a mistake, as he learns to judge them more impartially.

A few years ago we bought many a variety without having seen a single bloom of it, merely on the strength of the disseminator's reputation for honesty. But the standard is so high now that we buy very few varieties without having seen either the blooms on the exhibition table or else the plants growing on the disseminator's place. Not that we distrust the disseminators any more than we ever did (there is not a more straightforward and upright lot of men on earth than they), but we want to see just what we are buying. These men, too, have not been slow in recognizing the advantages of placing before us at every opportunity large vases full of their novelties to show their superiority over the older varieties. This in fact has become just as important a factor in the selling of a new variety as the printer's ink, and a well staged vase of extra fine blooms will draw as many orders as an attractive advertisement in a trade paper.

You will not see new varieties only at this exhibition, however, but the older ones will be here in large numbers, so you will have an opportunity to compare the new with the old, and often it happens that such comparison does not throw much credit to the new one.

That this will be the finest show of carnations ever put up in its history we feel assured of, as this city is centrally located and can easily be reached from every important carnation district in the land, besides being right in the midst of what is known as the carnation belt. Many of the leading varieties we have today were grown within 100 miles of this city.

If you have any variety in extra good shape you should bring some of the blooms along and show what you can do. We so often hear a visitor say that he had better blooms at home, but did not bring them because he thought that they were just ordinary. That might be true in some cases, but usually if he had brought them he would be making excuses for their inferiority. A customer once told us that when he looks at the blooms on the plants they look enormous, but when he gets a whole vase full together they seem to lose their size, etc.

Exhibition Blooms.

The buds that are to produce the exhibition blooms should be supported up straight unless they have strong enough stems to support them so. The blooms will take on a better form if they get an equal amount of light all around. Often, too, a heavy bloom will gradually bend even the strongest of stems until it will appear quite weak, and those should be supported properly. By this time the buds should be fully two-thirds grown on most varieties, as they should be opened up several days before they are to be staged so that they will have their fullest size when they are set up. You don't care if every bloom goes to sleep the day after the show as long as they don't go before the show is over, and it only lasts two days. Don't go to the other extreme and try to save them up too long. Begin cutting about a week ahead and then save all your very best blooms each day, so that if the first cut does not keep in good shape you will have plenty of fresher ones.

Place them in a cool dry cellar in a temperature of about 45 degrees. Cut the stems fresh every day and change the water and don't crowd too many blooms into a vase. Each bloom should stand out to itself so it can grow all round and keep a good form. They should be in water at least twelve hours before being shipped.

If the soil is full of roots a light dose of manure water will help them some in size and also in brightening the color of some varieties, especially the pink ones. Give it to them mild, though, else it may burst the calyxes. To overdo it would be worse than to give them none at all.

There will be plenty of room for every one, and we hope that every grower of carnations will bring at least enough blooms to fill one vase.

COMMERCIAL CULTIVATION OF THE CARNATION.

[Read before the Hartford Florists' Club, Hartford, Conn., January 28, 1902, by George S. Osborn.]

It is not my intention to go into the history of the divine flower, but to at once give you an experience not gained from reading works on the subject or by hearsay, but by actual observation and hard personal labor. You may find here some radical methods and perhaps to your minds useless work, but during the past few years there have been agencies at work which have compelled us to adopt new methods in order to arrive at the desired results. I have no doubt that older and more experienced growers than myself will differ with me, but my views have been asked and the truth must be told and if discussion follows, as I sincerely hope it will, I shall endeavor to defend my points, which I think I can successfully.

Propagation.

Let it be said right here, that all cuttings should be rooted in the establishment where they are to be grown. This is especially true of new varieties, they having in many cases to be grown a thousand or more miles from their native place and consequently have to get acclimated. Now the sooner this is done the better and I believe that a cutting taken from a healthy plant, placed immediately in damp moss and shipped to its destination is far better able to stand the journey and will arrive in as good condition if not better than one which has been in the cutting bench where the temperature is often much too high. Even admitting that it has been properly rooted, it does the roots no good and often harm to be rolled in moss and subjected to rough handling. Now as to getting acclimated, I claim from the moment the cutting is put in the cutting bench it begins to adapt itself to the change of water, air and other minor influences which are to bear upon its future life.

With cuttings from healthy plants at hand they should be properly trimmed and inserted in the cutting bench, which should have a brick or slate bottom covered to a depth of three inches with clean sand thoroughly packed. Heating pipes should be arranged to give bottom heat, also means provided to control it. After inserting the cuttings water thoroughly and examine each day, sprinkling as occasion requires. Propagation should be done in a shaded house designed for that purpose, for here can be maintained the proper temperature, 55 degrees, with sand 5 or 6 degrees higher, while in a growing house the risk of fluctuation in temperature, strong drafts and different degrees of light make the chances very poor of obtaining the ideal.

When the roots are three-eighths to one-half inch in length immediately pot in 2-inch, stand in same temperature and shade until well established, when remove to full sun either in a house devoted to carnations or one kept a few degrees lower. The potting of each cutting, while entailing extra work, will be found a profitable investment, for when lifted from the field the ball in most cases will be found intact and is a great help in getting the plants established after housing. It is preferable when the roots have filled the 2-inch pots to plant in flats or bench from which they can be taken at planting out time without injuring the ball.

Field Culture.

Assuming that the ground is in the proper mechanical condition and contains the proper food for carnation growth, it should be laid out in what may be called long beds. This is done by digging shallow paths every six or eight feet across the lot, throwing the soil up either way. These paths may run both ways of the lot or but one. The chief advantage of this bed system is that in very wet weather the paths will if arranged according to the aspect of the land, serve as a conductor of surplus water and also can be put to advantage in a dry season to maintain a system of irrigation. Artificial watering, however, is not to be advised except in extreme cases. Thorough stirring of the soil around the plants after each rain will keep the plants moving.

From planting out to housing, continual attention and systematic cultivation should be carried on. No rule can be laid down governing the topping or cutting back of plants; each variety must be studied as to its habit of growth. A few illustrations may be in order: The variety Mrs. G. M. Bradt is one of the most difficult to grow into shapely plants, while Mrs. Joost, Lawson and Marquis naturally take on a shapely habit. Daybreak, White Cloud and others of the sprawly habit need close watching.

Soil.

Some growers advocate a sandy soil, claiming the water passes off quickly when watering; soil capable of retaining moisture is best as explained later under house culture, consequently the soil should contain a small percentage of clay. Soil should be prepared some time in advance leaving the bone meal out until placed in benches. This getting in soil today and planting tomorrow is all wrong. It is better gotten in two or three weeks in advance in order that it may become settled by watering. A crop or two of weeds may also be destroyed. In using bone meal get the best you can; it is none too good. One-half the bone meal offered for sale should, like patent medicines, be thrown into the sea, where it would do the most good.

New Variegated Carnation Gaiety, as Exhibited at Chicago Last Week.

Housing.

Shade the houses on the inside by applying a mixture of whiting and water, either by brush or syringe; this daubing the outside with thin mud is not in keeping with recent improvements. Housing should begin as near July 30th as possible and be completed by August 15th; this gives the plants time to get well established by September 1st, and it is during this month that we are quite sure of having good growing weather inside. October will likely be a still better month, and it behooves us to make the most of this sixty days to get the plants in the best possible condition to stand the strain of winter work, for with poor plants in the benches November 1st means an unpaid board bill.

House Culture.

In planting carnations in the bench the orders must be "Come, boys," not "Go, boys." Dig a hole in the soil about six inches in diameter and two to three inches deep, forming a small hill rising in the center of the hole to within an inch of soil level; on this hill arrange the roots, letting them fall naturally in all directions, scatter a small handful of soil among the roots, shake the plants slightly, draw in the remaining soil, pack down firmly, leaving the plant about one-half inch higher than it stood in the field. Water thoroughly, seeing to it that every part of the bench is wet; syringe overhead several times daily until it is seen that root action has commenced, when the shading can be gradually removed, commencing on the glass admitting the first and last rays of the sun during the day. With plants well established give full sun and all the ventilation possible without letting the temperature go below 50 degrees at night. About November 1st, a little heat should be turned into the houses, for it is better with the thermometer at 40 degrees outside to have heat on and ventilators open than no heat on and ventilators closed.

In order to understand watering carnations, one must study the structure and general make-up of the whole plant. Some authorities tell us that the carnation is a surface feeder, but I believe this is more due to conditions than to natural habit. Insufficient or untimely watering, too shallow benches and unsuitable soil tend to make the plant a surface feeder. Six inches of soil is none too much and should be of such nature that water will penetrate every part quickly without an unnecessary volume passing through, as this carries out in solution valuable elements which should be held in readiness for the needs of the plant.

It will be clearly seen that, when the soil is wet to a depth of only one or two inches, leaving the lower part on the dry side, the roots will seek the surface, while if the moisture were where it should be, this would not be the case. The bloom on the leaves and stems is taken on for the purpose of resisting disease and should in no case be removed by syringing or otherwise, but on bright mornings the plants are benefited greatly by a gentle shower all over them, opinions to the contrary notwithstanding.

The average temperature for carnations at night is 55 degrees, some requiring two to three degrees higher, others two to five degrees lower. On bright days let the houses run up to 70 degrees, while on cloudy ones 60 degrees is sufficient.

Insects are caused by shiftlessness, and no amount of excuses offered can place the blame elsewhere, especially in these days when we have at hand so many preventives.

Many of the diseases peculiar to the carnation are caused primarily by the leaves being punctured by aphis or other insects, leaving the door open for disease to enter. Stem rot is classed as a fungous growth and can be in a great measure prevented by using the carbonate of copper and ammonia solution in the cutting bench, also by spraying the plants after housing.

In the case of a variety known to be subject to stem rot, it is advisable after housing and watering for the first time to make a shallow trench between the rows of plants and water in this until vigorous growth commences. Rust is a constitutional disease which seems to crop out in the finest varieties. It is best treated by picking off affected leaves and keeping the plants in a high state of cultivation.

To me the fact that a variety is liable to rust is evidence of blue blood, so prevalent does it seem among our finest sorts. This brings us to the point of harvesting and disposing of the finished product, a subject which can only be treated in a separate paper.

CARNATION E. CROCKER.

I notice in the Review that Mr. N. H. Gano likes Crocker. Will he please tell us through the Review whether his soil is heavy or light, the night temperature he gives this variety and whether he feeds it much or not? By so doing he will oblige some of us who like this carnation but cannot get enough blooms from it. W. Bros.

Our soil is a light loam naturally quite fertile. When filling the benches mix thoroughly into the soil 1-5 of good cow manure, not fresh nor yet very old. In feeding them I never put on a heavy mulch at one time but frequently top-dress with cow manure one time and sheep manure pulverized another, with an occasional sprinkle of lime and once or twice a season a good dusting of hardwood ashes heavier than the lime is put on. I always see that the beds are in condition for a good watering when any fertilizer is put on and select days that it is safe to water and syringe.

I keep the temperature usually at 55 degrees at night, with a little air on except in very cold weather, and occasionally drop to 50 degrees for a few nights. This lowering of the temperature is in my opinion quite beneficial, though it is but a few degrees, and it does not cause any more burst calyxes than when the temperature is held steadily at 55 degrees. I believe the application of lime has a marked effect on the strength of the calyx, as we cut very few imperfect flowers.

Last season was our first experience with Crocker and we cut only about half as many blooms up to this time as we have this season, but there was something about it that compelled me to have faith in it. This season, with some lighter soil, higher temperature and a little more regularity in feeding and culture, I am satisfied that I have made no mistake in giving it the largest bench space on the place.

The coming season by early planting in field and better culture, I expect to have the plants as large again as they were this season at benching time, August 1. I am fixed now so I can irrigate from a flowing well the patch where we plant the carnations, and shall use some good cow manure on it.

NIXON H. GANO.

A CARNATION HOUSE.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph taken shortly before Christmas of a house of carnations at the establishment of Mr. T. B. Stroup, New Philadelphia, Ohio. The house is 20x100 and the center bench is planted with Flora Hill, the side benches containing Marquis, Lawson and Joost. The side benches had been cut over just before the picture was taken.

Mr. Stroup writes: "The house was planted August 15, the soil being a sandy loam, not very rich, just a little better than that they were grown in outside. The plants filled the bench nicely with roots in a short time and on September 1 were given a top dressing of lime. A mulch of manure, bone meal and soil, thoroughly mixed and allowed to stand a few weeks, was put on December 1.

"Pinching was kept up till September 20, only allowing a few of the strongest shoots to bloom. By keeping them pinched till that date the number of flowers was few until the mum season was nearly over, and the quality of flower and stem was excellent from the beginning.

"So far this season (up to January 17) I have cut 5,200 blooms from this house, which contains 2,000 plants, and the larger part of the cut was in December.

"The house is heated and lighted by natural gas. The benches are 'everlasting,' the bottoms being hollow tile of special length, so that two when placed end to end will reach across the bench (5 feet 10 inches). They could be made in one piece, but are more convenient to handle in 29-inch lengths. These are supported by concrete walls four inches thick and twelve inches high. The sides and ends are of brick set on edge, with a good bedding of cement mortar. These beds cost about twice as much as plank, but will last a lifetime."

LETTUCE FORCING.

O. H. B. has a house of lettuce which will not head, though seed was sown September 15. He has kept the plants on the dry side, and in a low temperature, using very little manure in the soil, and wishes to know what to do to bring them quickly to maturity.

Plants from seed sown in September should be ready to cut in from twelve to fourteen weeks, if everything has been favorable to growth. What your correspondent calls running his plants on the dry side may possibly be too dry, and that might account for the delay of the plants heading. Watering, of course, is a kind of instinct to some men, and such men have comparatively few troubles to contend with. While the lettuce is impatient of an oversupply of water and a close, stuffy atmosphere, still sufficient water must be given the crop to allow it to finish without any check.

Assuming that the plants have received sufficient water, the low temperature your correspondent speaks of should not retard the crop unless, of course, it has been too low. A temperature of 40 to 45 degrees nights suits lettuce first rate. A lower temperature would of course retard the crop, and O. H. B. can figure for himself whether that is the trouble or not. For myself I would raise the temperature some, and give the plants a good soaking of water. Then, if they still refuse to head up, I would sell off the crop for what it would bring and figure on replanting as soon as possible.

Many of our florists nowadays are growing lettuce in conjunction with other crops, and so the following notes on culture may be found useful. If lettuce is desired by the first week in November the first seed should be sown the third week in August. For a continuous succession seed should be sown every week. In about three weeks the seedlings will need transplanting, and then, say three weeks later the final transplanting may be given, putting out the plants eight inches apart.

Your correspondent says he used little if any manure in his soil. He would possibly have done better had he spread an inch or two of fine fresh stable manure on top of the soil, and dug it under. This will give a very gentle heat at the root of the young plants and encourage root action. After planting a night temperature of 50 degrees may be maintained until the plants are growing vigorously, when the temperature should be gradually lowered to 40 degrees nights with 70 to 75 degrees sunny days. The worst enemy of lettuce is green fly, and this must be kept down by mild but persistent fumigation.

If successional sowings are made one can have young plants ready to replant as soon as the first crop is cut away. Keep the soil well supplied with manure if you want tender lettuce. If the plants are kept too wet rot will set in, but the careful grower will not experience any serious trouble in this direction. Lettuce forcing is now an important industry and the returns, while not perhaps a gold mine,, are generally enough to compensate for the investment.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

The program and premium list for the meeting and exhibition of the above society to be held at Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 19 and 20, has been issued. The papers include one by C. W. Ward, of Queens, N. Y., on sub-watering and the use of artificial fertilizers, one by Wallace R. Pierson, of Cromwell, Conn., on sterilizing soil for carnations, and one by E. G. Gillett, Cincinnati, "A Criticism of Growers' Methods."

In addition to certificates and medals for new varieties there are numerous classes with valuable cash prizes for standard varieties and they are so arranged that every one can enter.

Any one desiring a copy of the schedule should address Albert M. Herr, secretary, Lancaster, Pa.

MANSFIELD, O.—The Berno Floral Co. are building a new house 18x140. They will also open a first-class store at No. 6 West Third street on March 1.

BUFFALO.

Business.

Occasionally you hear the same old unthinking, stupid observation: "Flowers are scarce on account of so much dark and cloudy weather." There is a certain class that is bound to say that even if we had the sunny winter of Denver. The fact is, in my recollection of thirty-four years of New York winters, I never remember a more enjoyable one. Not a day yet that you could not take a ride or even a walk with pleasure. This morning the first zero of the season and about every other day the sun shining brightly. Last week we did have a snow storm, 25 inches on the level in 24 hours. Buffalo seems to have been in the center of it, but our neighboring city on the north, Lockport, had four feet. So things are never so bad as they might be.

There is not much to say about business. Flowers have been coming in in much better supply and Commissioner and Commission Man Kasting says they are pretty well cleaned up. Violets have taken a drop and plenty to be had. Good Brides and Maids none too plentiful and he that wants the best must still pay Sir Thomas Lipton or Sir Thomas Lawson prices. American Beauty is scarce and high in price. This is usual at this time of year, and the best of growers seem to always be off crop from the holidays on for two months. Some fine local grown tulips are now cut and Romans, Paper White and valley are plentiful. Carnations are in much greater supply and they have to be perfect flowers and a good size to command a paying price.

A Visit to Christenson.

I paid a very short visit to Mr. C. F. Christenson on North Main street last Sunday (between services). He has three houses of carnations looking about as thrifty and productive as I ever saw this useful and popular flower. Christ is no hand to try too many new varieties at once, but the standard varieties he grows to perfection. White Cloud, Crane, Bradt, Joost and Lawson are done to perfection. He thinks much of Estelle and his beds of Marquis are simply wonderful. He would as soon think of throwing away old Daybreak and its sports as he would White Cloud, and the old wonder grown as he has it is indispensable. His mignonette, lilies, and all his stock is in the usual neat and excellent condition that only a thorough gardener can have it.

I am not out of town quite as much as my sparkling friend, Mr. Andy Adams, intimates in a contemporary, but I do miss a good many visitors, and the only one we have interviewed of late was Mr. August Ringier, of Chicago, on his return trip. He looks fat and rugged, in fact he resembles an Abyssinian lion reared on his hind legs.

About Babies.

I regret exceedingly that I neglected to mention the advent of an important accession to our population. There are lots of babies born. It has occurred in our family frequently, and a repetition of the performance is received as complacently as a change of seasons or partial eclipse of the moon, but occasionally an infant arrives worthy of more than ordinary notice. If it's the first net profit or asset of an amicable co-partnership, then it overshadows all other worldly considerations, and is really the only thing in the world worth possessing. The sun was made to revolve around its resting place. It's the only one. All other babies are commonplace. There are lots of them, but what do they amount to? Ours is the only one "what ever was." This is just as it should be, and more than that as it must be for without the self-denying, pure, unselfish love of your offspring the species would have been extinct ages ago; in fact, it never would have existed on this little ball of revolving matter.

And this leads me to remark that a few weeks since Mr. W. F. Kasting was the happy recipient of a beautiful gift from his dutiful wife of a lovely boy. It has been foolishly reported that the child's first articulated holler referred to Easter stock. Nothing of the kind. Having been carefully recorded on a graphophone and reproduced for my benefit I clearly made out in the "Heine" dialect, "Papa, keep out of politics." And with uplifted hands the father replied: "Baby Phil, I will."

Lake View Rose Gardens, Jamestown.

I did steal away Saturday night, accompanied by one of my 5 feet 11 inch babies to the pretty city of Jamestown to look again and learn at that great place called the Lake View Rose Gardens; proprietor, Mr. A. N. Broadhead; manager, Mr. Charles Roney. I paid this place a visit some eighteen months ago; since then 200,000 feet of glass has been added to it. It is scarcely five years since a few houses were built, the beginning of this immense place. There is now 500,000 feet of glass, which covers three-fourths of a square, leaving the northwest section of this square still unbuilt. Material is already bought to fill this up, about another 200,000 feet, and that will round off, or rather square off, the block.

It would take several columns to describe all that is to be seen here, for it is not crops alone that are interesting, but the structures and heating are of great interest to any one who is not too fossilized to observe and learn, and that's a condition that sometimes affects young as well as bald heads.

As you enter the long shed from the west, on your right are six or seven houses of smilax as perfect as smilax can be grown, with side benches of Adiantum cuneatum sending up their second crop. Few things on the place are more creditable than these benches of ferns. South of these houses on a slightly higher level are a number of rose houses. Meteor and some houses of Kaiserin resting. One house in this range is filled with hydrangeas, very bushy plants in 7, 8 and 9-inch pots, and showing buds. Then come several houses of violets grown on benches. Many of the beds looked new and where they were not a success Mr. Roney said he had to purchase the plants, and bought stock never did well with him the first year. Two or three houses of Asparagus plumosus, some grown to strings and some kept dwarf by cutting for sprays.

Going east you enter the first house of another style. In this range there must be eight or nine houses, each 240x31. The first contains most of the Easter lily crop (Japans). This year they potted 11,000; nearly all are just showing bud. Then there are what I call an extra fine lot of Crimson Rambler. They are lifted plants, grown on the place, and many of them in only 6-inch pots, but bushy and already showing assurance of good flowers. As Mr. Roney remarked, the days of large Crimson Ramblers are past, or else confined to three or four of the largest cities, and we don't need them.

You now enter about two acres of carnations. These lofty houses run north and south, the gutters are 6 feet high, no partition of any kind between them, and it is difficult to realize any houses lighter or more suitable for carnations. One of these houses is almost filled with Lawson, and a sight it is. It would be difficult to say what variety is not grown here. Of those sent out in recent years Lawson stands pre-eminently above all in every good and desired quality. Mr. Roney thinks Joost most profitable, is pleased with Roosevelt and grows Crocker better than I have ever seen it, except perhaps at Robert Craig & Sons (I have never been at Lancaster, Pa., don't you know). Crocker at Lake View is grand. They have done with Crane, but think highly of Estelle, and so do I. It's the scarlet up to date, but this is not an article on carnations.

We will now walk north and enter the last built range. I should say quite another acre and a half. These houses are some 28 or 30 feet wide, running east and west. The gutter post, a 2-inch pipe supporting the Garland iron gutter with an improved attachment of their own, is 6 feet 6 inches high. The south bar is 16 feet and the north bar 20, but in such large and lofty houses they appear at a casual glance equal span. Again, no partition of any kind, and there is nothing but the 2-inch well painted iron pipe to obstruct the view of this field of roses. Now some very worthy expert growers may say, "I should be afraid of currents of air in this big space and hence mildew." I must now say that in bench after bench of Maids, Brides, Golden Gate, Liberty, Meteor and American Beauty I never detected a single speck of mildew.

Although the crop of flowers was slightly off at the time of our visit, I saw proof of what had been cut, and particularly was I impressed with the health, vigor and color of Bride and Bridesmaid, but they were all good. All these roses are on the ground. It would not be right to call them solid beds, because on the surface of the ground is 2 or 3 inches of broken stone, with the compost, about 5 or 6 inches, on that. This cannot be called solid beds, which means that the roots of the plants not only go through the soil that is above the level of the ground but can penetrate down into the deeper soil, and if that has been ploughed and manured the roots will find it and ramble and a luxuriant growth will result, but will the flowers have the substance, the firmness and the finish of those produced on a space where the roots have a limit to their feeding ground? I think not, but this is wandering from my subject. I have only to say it is a wonderful and pleasing sight to look over this modern range of glass covered field.

There is yet another block of houses, seven or eight of them, some 250 feet long and 20 feet wide. These they call the old houses because they were built in the last century, 1898. They are the old-fashioned three-quarter span, long span to the south. They are convinced that they are not the kind of houses and have already filled up the 18 feet of space between each house, will tear out all partitions and then it will be a big lot of useful glass. They are at present filled with roses, but are tired of the expense of heating them, the labor of working them and the waste of room.

Now, I don't pretend to have covered all the ground. There are several large propagating houses and other houses filled with various stock and Easter stuff. The packing house is a finely equipped adjunct and adjoining it is the cold storage house. The packing room is about 30x60, with two long broad tables covered with zinc.

The heating of this large establishment is done by two batteries of huge steam boilers. The consumption of coal is from one to two carloads a day during winter. The first boiler pit was excavated some 12 feet beneath the ground, which has been the cause of many a cuss word from Mr. Roney, or at least would have been if he was that sort of man. The last built boiler house is a large brick structure and the boilers are on the level of the houses, and Mr. Roney says he wants no other system. He would not excavate an inch below the surface and he is most assuredly correct.

A word or two about the men who find the sinews of war and the brains to run this place. Mr. Broadhead is just what his name implies, broad in every way, with energy and broadmindedness to run a dozen big industries, which he does. Mr. Charles Roney, who took charge of this place when an infant (I mean the place, not him), is first of all a prince of good fellows, untiring energy, willing to learn a point from any one, and still more willing to impart his knowledge to any one who seeks it. Broadhead and Roney pull together as a well matched team should.

The Walter Mott Seed & Bulb Co.

In one of the principal business streets of Jamestown is a fine store, really two stores, and the sign above reads: "The Walter Mott Seed & Bulb Co." Several of my readers have heard of Walter Mott, as he used to dart through the country for years at short intervals in the interest of the well-known house of Henry A. Dreer. It is the proper destiny of all men of ability and ambition to get into business for themselves, and with the enterprise and means of Mr. Broadhead there was a grand opportunity. The store and appointments in which to do business cannot be easily excelled, and you can depend on it that no reasonable request that will enhance the facility to do business will be denied the young firm, and so we believe business will be done right up to the twentieth century standard.

Seldom does a firm begin business under such favorable auspices, and we believe all hands will make the most of it. I would remind you that this being their first year the seeds they sell are sure to be fresh and full of vitality. I will leave next year to take care of itself and as my pencil is worn out will say goodbye to Jamestown, that pretty little city of 25,000 people by whose homes runs the Allegheny river, small here but ever widening till it joins the Ohio, then helps to swell the Father of Waters and flows sluggishly on to be lost in the Gulf of Mexico.

As I rode home I was lost in the gulf of meditation and thought what a small fly I am, talking about building 21,000 feet of glass, and here they add on 200,000 feet as coolly as some men make a four-sash hotbed. Don't trouble, boys, there is room for all. The man that runs best what he has, big or little, will be the winner of pecuniary profit and that is not an unworthy object if worthily and honestly pursued. W. S.

PIPING.

Please give us a plan for piping these houses most conveniently, using 2-inch flows and 1-inch returns, of which we have plenty. We would like to have these pipes laid so that we will not have to pass under or step over them to get from one house to the other. There is a basement under office, work room and cut flower room. One house is to be used for roses and the other for carnations. Lowest outside temperature is 25 degrees below zero. Z. & Son.

In reply to the inquiry of Z. & Son, the drawing shown herewith indicates the best arrangement of piping for the purpose, using up the stock of 2 in. and 1 in. pipe which is on hand and leaving the doorways and walks clear of obstruction. The mains should all be placed below the floor line in the trench constructed for that purpose. Air valves should be placed on each return pipe in each coil near to the return valve and the pipes should grade in each coil downward from the steam or inlet valve back to the return main.

New York.

NEW YORK.

Ward's fancy carnations have become almost a household word but Ward's fancy chickens were almost an unknown quantity until one dark evening last week, when they, too, were made notorious by an adept thief, and now the chickens are not only almost, but altogether an unknown quantity. Everybody is glad the carnations are left. No one could afford to lose them; but the chickens—well, there are others!

The prophecy made two weeks ago concerning the removal of the venerable 34th street market to the same building on 26th street, where the New York Cut Flower Co. now dwells, is about to be fulfilled. In April the whole third floor of the building will be occupied by the old market. In the basement of this building are splendid bowling alleys and room enough for the added amusements that make the Philadelphia clubrooms so attractive, and higher up is ample opportunity for permanent quarters for the New York Florists' Club rooms, with facilities for banquets and all the accessories that make life worth living.

Last Friday night the elevator in this building, well loaded with wholesalers, dropped thirty feet. Excepting Mr. Nash, Jr., the load was made up of members and employes of the Cut Flower Co., ten of them altogether. It was a close call, but not one was injured. A prolific shower of plaster and an uncomfortable shaking led every one to exclaim on reaching the bottom: "Wouldn't that jar you?" and it did!

This was not the only fall in the wholesale line last week. Prices for fancies tumbled also, while the demand for medium stock increased.

Florists' stores in the vicinity of 42d street were especially fortunate during the great dynamite explosion Monday noon, the worst ever known in the history of the city, when hotels, hospitals and private houses for blocks were completely destroyed and scores killed and injured. Such a scene of ruin and devastation has never been seen in New York in all its history, from a similar cause, if, indeed, anywhere in the country. Glass enough was broken to cover every greenhouse plant in America.

Albert Wadley, who was so seriously injured in the N. Y. C. wreck three weeks ago, convalesces slowly, and will be a long time yet in the doctor's care. But the saving of his life and limbs has been accomplished.

Today (Wednesday) A. S. Burns, Jr., of Woodside, son of the great bowler of the New York club, becomes a benedict. May his "score" be a credit to the name.

The great carnation specialists, Ward, Warburton and Fisher, contributed the handsome table decorations for the Tarrytown annual dinner. It is needless to say the exhibit was au fait.

The interest in the coming flower show in New York this fall grows daily. Information of every kind concerning it may be had from Mr. William Plumb, whose permanent address will be 51 West 28th street.

The noncompetitive retail exhibit seems to be just what the retailers will appreciate, and many of the leading ones have already expressed their intention of making elaborate displays.

The Society of American Artists, if it decides to co-operate with the florists, will transform the great garden into an art and sculpture gallery that will enhance the splendid effects of elaborate floral decoration.

The liberal premiums will draw exhibitors from every part of the country and the early enthusiasm and preparations augur well for the anticipated triumph.

Next Saturday the beefsteak dinner of the New York Florists' Club will become a memory, but it promises to be a pleasant one. A large attendance is already assured.

Small's windows, on Broadway, this week are very attractive. The immense combination photo of the Palestine Commandery, with its fern surroundings, completely occupies one window, and announces the annual ball of this organization on January 30, the elaborate decorations for which will be furnished by this firm. A florally framed engraving of Schley adds to the military effect. Crowds are in front of this window constantly.

Downtown the wholesale seedsmen are hustling night and day in spreading broadcast their handsome catalogues. Everything now promises a remarkably profitable season. Without an exception, all report one of the busiest openings and brightest outlooks in their experience.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business has improved somewhat, though up to a few days ago there was but little doing. At this writing there is a big demand for choice stock of all kinds, but it is very scarce and prices have advanced some. At present there is a great hustle for stock and the market is short on all kinds of flowers. The past week there was a call for a large lot of red carnations for the midwinter graduating class of the High school. A few large weddings, receptions and other entertainments were reported by the West End florists, who seem to do a great deal of this sort of work of late, which keeps them quite busy.

The rose market has been very weak. As the demand is much greater than the supply, the present conditions are not likely to improve while this dull, cloudy weather continues. The few that are coming in bring top prices. Choice stock of Brides and Maids bring $6 to $8; Meteors, as high as $10; Perles, Gates and Woottons, $5 and $6.

Carnations are in big demand, and even these are short and are bought up quickly each morning at from $3 to $4 for fancy and $2 for all other kinds.

Bulb stuff sold well owing to the short supply of other flowers. Many funeral designs were seen the past week made up entirely of Romans and paper whites; the price is up to $3 on these; valley is $3 and $4; callas and Harrisii also sold well at $15; freesias are $2 and $3.

Violets, too, had a big call, and are also becoming scarce. The price has been 60 cents, but this morning (Monday) they are selling at 75 cents. Quite a lot of galax was sold last week, which was, no doubt, due to the scarcity of stock.

Very little stock is coming in today and the wholesale men are complaining that they cannot fill half their orders.

Mr. William Trillow, of Chicago, is a visitor this week and is calling on his many friends in the trade.

Death of Charles Connon.

Death has claimed one of our most beloved craftsmen, Mr. Charles Connon, of Webster Grove, who died at his home last Saturday at noon. His death was caused by septic poisoning, and he was sick only one week. Mr. Connon was 75 years of age and was for many years one of our leading florists. He was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and has been in this country for fifty years. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his death. Mr. Connon was a member of the S. A. F. and the St. Louis Florists' Club. The funeral took place Tuesday morning from the family residence at Webster Grove. The interment was at Oak Hill cemetery. Many beautiful floral designs were sent by his many friends and the St. Louis Florists' Club. The members of the club attended in a body to pay their last respects to their dead comrade. We extend our deepest sympathy to the family.

Bowling.

The florist bowlers rolled three games with the team which was selected to go to Buffalo to roll in the tournament, and won one game from them. These games were rolled just before they left for Buffalo, and the following scores were made:

Trade Conditions for Jan. 10-25.

Just a good, fair, steady call for everything and just about enough material to supply it. Just about a just arrangement, isn't it? Red roses and violets are a bit out of condition, coming, generally, rather poor, and a directly opposite arrangement so far as pink and white roses are concerned, since they are coming very good and long stemmed and are in the majority.

Prices as a whole are a bit lower than as last quoted, and I would give this schedule if obliged to furnish any: American Beauties, 4 to 60 cents each, although some claim higher sales; smaller red roses, up to 16 cents; other colors, from 2 to 25 cents on a few of the best. Many rather poor pinks are sold at 1 cent and 5 cents is obtained on a very few fine fancies, 2 cents buying a good ordinary pink. Violets are selling all the way from 40 cents to $1, according to quality and previous arrangements with purchaser. Bulb material is not overplentiful and the different kinds are selling well at fairly good prices.

A peculiarity of the times is the uncertainty of procuring anything special or a bit out of the ordinary ruts of traffic. It is somewhat a case of one day you see it and the next day you do not. "Old Prob" seems to be in a nervous frame of mind and is to blame for much irregularity in the florist business.

There has not been so much mignonette in the market as usual this winter, but no one has seemed to be distressed thereby. It now sells in rather small lots at from 2 to 4 cents, and Peirce & Sons have lately put up some of a very fancy strain and I am told have reached $1.50 per dozen for it.

Sundry Happenings.

Miss Kittie Dacey, for ten or a dozen years employed by J. W. Newman, was married a few days ago, proving her occupation upon other than funeral designs. She evidently believes no woman can serve two masters, more than any man, so she promptly leaves her employer. If she serves the new man as well as she did New-man congratulations are due. It is a poor rule that will not work both ways and if her new master uses her as well as the old she cannot complain.

J. L. Heilbrun puts out a tidy card advertising "Ye Colonial Florist," a new venture at the corner of Mason and Avery streets, behind the store once occupied by the Twombly Co. Being a nearby restauranter himself, he employs two young florists in the new branch of his business.

A. N. Pierson, of the mammoth Connecticut houses at Cromwell, visited us a few days ago. As it takes half a million feet of glass to cover his operations some of the Boston efforts may have looked rather small to him.

W. D. Philbrick, of Newton Center, best known to florists as a violet grower, died at the Boston city hospital Sunday, January 26, as the result of a surgical operation performed a few days ago. He had not been well for a year or more, being troubled with complicated kidney ailments.

J. S. MANTER.

Horticultural Society.

At the adjourned meeting of the Horticultural Society of Chicago, held last Saturday afternoon, the old staff of officers was re-elected, as follows: President, W. H. Chadwick; first vice-president, H. G. Selfridge; second vice-president, E. G. Uihlein; third vice-president, E. Wienhoeber; secretary and treasurer, W. N. Rudd; assistant secretary, E. A. Kanst. The only change in the board of directors was the election of W. E. Kelley to succeed Otto Young. There were some additions to the executive committee and it is now as follows: The officers and O. P. Bassett, J. C. Vaughan, G. L. Grant, E. A. Kanst, Edgar Sanders, P. J. Hauswirth, W. A. Peterson and W. C. Egan.

The project of a spring show to take the place of the usual fall exhibition was abandoned and the executive committee was instructed to hold a fall show as usual this year unless thought inadvisable. Three new members were elected.

The Market.

The supply of roses has shortened still further and as a result prices are even higher than last week. Good Brides and Maids bring from $8 to $12, though some poor stock is sold at $5 to $6. Beauties are equally scarce and stiff in price. Of carnations there is a good supply for the season, but the shortage in roses brings enough call for carnations to keep prices up to a very good figure. Good stock ranges from $1.50 to $3 in price, with poor short stuff reaching down to $1.25 or even $1. A few very extra fancy reach $4 and $5. In the poorer grades dark colors are least in demand, the main call being for white and light colors.

In violets good dark colored sorts sell very well at $1 a hundred, but Campbells move very slowly at 30 to 50 cents. The only sales of this stock seem to be to people who can make them take the place of other cheap flowers in funeral work. Some good lilac is coming in and it sells very well.

Bulbous stock goes slowly at very low figures, though some very fine valley, forced by the Klehms from home grown pips, sells readily at $5. It is remarkable how much finer and richer in fragranee this valley is than that from imported pips. Evidently there is something more in growing the pips here than in any saving in cost. Klehms are also sending in some La Reine tulips that sell well at $3 to $4.

Taken as a whole the month has been a very good one from the wholesaler's standpoint. And the leading retailers say trade has been good as a rule, but those doing largely a counter trade say business fell short of expectations.

Various Items.

Mr. J. D. Eisele, manager of the H. A. Dreer greenhouses, at Riverton, N. J., was a welcome visitor last Monday and Tuesday.

W. E. Lynch is again at his post at E. H. Hunt's and says that his wife and child are now convalescent.

J. A. Evans, Richmond, Ind., is in the city.

Some fine blooms of the new white carnation Gov. Wolcott arrived from Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass., the morning after the carnation show last week, having been delayed in transit.

Adam Schillo, the dealer in lumber who has supplied many florists, died last Sunday, aged 65 years.

Arrangements for the trip to the Indianapolis meeting and exhibition of the American Carnation Society, Feb. 19 and 20, have been made. The party will travel by the Pennsylvania road on the train leaving Chicago at 8:40 p. m. February 18, reaching Indianapolis early the morning of the 19th. Berths may be reserved by addressing E. F. Winterson, 45 Wabash avenue. A rate of $6.70 for the round trip is made on the certificate plan. All florists who wish to travel with the party are invited to do so.

Bowling.

Sixteen of the local florists participated in the pilgrimage to Milwaukee last Saturday evening and all report a great time in the Cream City. The Chicagoans won both games from the Milwaukeeans by a good margin. After the games all attended the annual Brewers' masked ball, where they made quite a sensation, as can be imagined from the picture of the bunch that appears in this issue. All report the hospitality of the Milwaukee boys as unbounded.

Last Tuesday evening the regular games were played on the local alleys. The growers won two from the Retailers and the latter one from the former, while the Wholesalers took three from the Miscellaneous. Following are the scores:

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The third annual dinner of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held at the Florence hotel, Tarrytown, Wednesday evening, January 22. The afternoon meeting of the society elected for the ensuing year: William Scott, president; David McFarlane, vice-president; E. W. Newbrand, secretary; James W. Smith, treasurer.

Mr. Cockburn, the first president of the society, Mr. Francis Gibson and several of the charter members were present, and of the 136 members of the society over fifty participated in the banquet. It was a "love feast." Harmony is the watchword of these people and geniality was the prevailing demonstration of the evening.

A goodly number of visitors were present, amongst whom were Senator McClellan, of Westchester county; Lyman E. Brown, president of the Duchess County Horticultural Society; Mr. Fred Frend, president of the Westchester Gardeners' Society, and Mr. Shuey, ex-president; the editors of three local papers, the Argus, Press Record and Daily News; C. W. Ward, of the Cottage Gardens, Queens, N. Y.; and Messrs. O'Mara, Withers, Butterfield and Austin Shaw, of New York.

The menu was an elaborate one and none the less palatable because of its temperate characteristics. Mr. James W. Smith presided gracefully and in a neat speech introduced "Great Scott" No. 2, the toastmaster of the evening. No set speeches had been arranged for, but the flow of eloquence was still flowing when the last train obliged the New York contingent to depart. Amongst the new members of the society we found our old friend Peter McDonald, who is now living in Irvington and busy with landscaping work there.

The tables were beautifully decorated with many of the new varieties of carnations. The chief of police of Tarrytown was present, and gave an air of protectiveness to the affair that was unexplained until it developed that he was himself a practical horticulturist.

Mr. O'Mara was the first speaker and gave a very witty address, involving the senator and the "chief" and the mysteries of hybridization, closing with personal reminiscences of twenty years ago and experiences with the gardeners on the Hudson when he first practiced his abilities as a salesman amongst them, several of the personal friends of those days being present.

Senator McClellan spoke of his early experiences as a "master gardener" in the south of Scotland and proved himself a practical horticulturist still, a fact of which he seemed to be proud. He told of the high standing of the gardeners in the old country, advocating their training and the raising of the standard here, and eloquently dwelling on the glory due the men who have developed new varieties of flowers. Though still a young man, the senator declared he had "learned enough to quit the business" before ex-President O'Mara was born! but his real interest was unabated.

Mr. Withers, of American Gardening, was the next speaker and gave a very interesting address upon the "benefit to gardening from horticultural societies," especially dwelling on the high lines on which the Tarrytown society had developed, the elevating effect of these yearly gatherings upon the young men in the business and the future of the "American hybrid" gardener, as compared with the "imported article."

Mr. Lyman E. Brown, of Poughkeepsie, president of the Duchess County Horticultural Society, proved himself to be "the young-man-eloquent." His speech was a masterpiece of pathos and eloquence, as he dilated on the "old home on the farm" and the old-fashioned flower garden, and his recitation on "The Old, Old Home" was admirably rendered.

It was only natural, after this, that Mr. C. W. Ward, of Queens, waxed reminiscent—told of the log cabin in the north woods of Michigan where he was born, now the site of the county court house, while the woods around the cabin have developed into a populous city. He accorded to James Vick the honor of his own love of flowers and horticultural development; told of the mysteries of hybridization; the individuality of blooms which evidenced the characteristics of the growers, and closed with a brief history of the carnation, and a humorous story delivered in the inimitable patois of the half-breed hunter of the north woods.

Mr. Butterfield, of the Florists' Exchange, sang some of "the old songs" sweetly, as usual, and Mr. Shaw, of the Review, read the "Annual Poem," written for the occasion and reproduced below. After the departure of the New Yorkers the members and guests remaining continued the festivities in music and speech and song until the "wee sma' hours." Altogether it was a gathering full of interest and benefit long to be remembered, and the Tarrytown society gives evidence of good feeling, ambition and co-operation that will long continue it, in growth and prosperity.

The Press.

In the great city, wandering up and down
Amid its hustling, rustling, bustling crowd,
I seemed to hear a voice in accents loud
Above the din say, "On to Tarrytown!"

Its influence like a mantle wrapped me 'round;
I could not still the magic of its spell.
The "spirit moved me" constantly, and—well,
You see, I had to come to Tarrytown.

And why not? Here are men of great renown;
'Tis good to see them, hear their welcome voice;
Such greeting surely makes all hearts rejoice,
And this one always gets at Tarrytown.

From east to west, or north to south, what town
Has grander views and vistas, sweeter air?
What river, mountains, maidens, can compare
With those we see right here in Tarrytown?

Well, of the "press" what can I say that's new?
It's older than the hills, I do believe,
For Adam started it with Mother Eve,
And still it lives. Ask Chauncey M. Depew!

The wine "press" had its start in Eden's garden,
The com"press," too, began its business there,
De"press"ion now and then made Adam swear;
Ex"press"ion came with Eve's first "Dolly Varden."

The press! The press! The power beyond the throne!
Great dictator of nations vast they sway.
Thy magic touch turns darkness into day,
The crown of regal majesty's thine own!

Thou say'st the word, and lo! all earth responds;
Through thee the wide, wide world is made akin.
And trust and right and liberty shall win
When potently thou strikest human bonds.

God prosper thee, thou giant of the ages,
Most wonderful of all since time began!
Make thee subserve the common good of man,
Perpetuate our orators and sages.

Carry the message over land and sea,
The sweetest message sent by voice or pen,
Of lasting "Peace on earth, good will to men!"
And hasten thus the heaven that is to be.

"But what," I hear you say, "of 'press'age that pertains to we'uns?
What of the horicultural, and whither are we drifting?
And don't you think the news you give us needs a lot of sifting?
Why not to this land cater now and less to Europeans?"

Ah, well! 'Tis not for me to speak; I'm young yet at the "bizziness;"
There's Butterfield and Withers, too, and your own Mr. Pierson,
And from your brilliant ranks I know you have full many a dear son
Who could the subject tackle, sir, and not have "such a dizziness."

But if you press the question, why, of course, "the flag's unfurled,"
And, as a modest amateur, I venture this opinion—
Forgive me if on your account I dare to "spread my pinion"—
The Horticultural Press of our own country "beats the world!"

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The variety of cut flowers is increasing. In roses, Brunners are to be seen, Ivory is very fine and the general list, with possibly the exception of Beauties, are coming in more freely. Spring flowers are popular, many of the retailers making them a specialty. Freesia is good and plentiful, such freesia as was not dreamed of ten years ago.

Tulips are to be seen everywhere, Keizerskroon and the Prince of Austria being notable additions to the list. Fred Ehret received 2,000 La Reine in one day and sold them all. Daffodils are also plentiful, the single varieties being specially fine. These flowers go a long way toward making up the shortage which is sometimes felt in roses and even in carnations. The white varieties have been in brisk demand. Daisies are improving. Callas are scarce.

Notes.

Henry F. Michell has a new mignonette, "Marvelous," with flower spikes 15 to 18 inches long. It received a silver medal last week from the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society and was much admired. The stock is being grown by John Albright, of West Laurel Hill.

Walter P. Stokes, Moorestown, N. J., has begun sending white lilacs to Fred Ehret.

Ways Bros., of York Lynn, are sending a large white seedling carnation.

Samuel S. Pennock is now offering his hardy ferns, which were cut in the fall and kept in cold storage. These are superior to the freshly gathered stock and bring a higher price, $2 a thousand.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons are doing their own electrical work. This is a great convenience, decorations being no longer delayed by the lateness of the electrician.

Joseph Heacock, of Wyncote, is sending in some fine long-stemmed Beauties.

Pennock Bros.' window this week is of a golden hue. Genistas, yellow tulips and daffodils form the groups.

Robert Crawford, Jr., considers great development possible in the Christmas trade in flowering plants. He suggests that poinsettias be grown either in 4-inch pots or made up into pans, the plants not to be over 6 or 8 inches in height. He likes both varieties of Lorraine, preferring the old sort to the light pink.

C. H. Fox makes a specialty of cheap plants in quantities. His sales of rubber plants at 15 cents each have created comment.

The Florists' Bowling Team defeated the Pan-American in three straight games, securing first place in the Bowlers' League. The following is the score of the florists:

Moss	156	175	157
Dunham	167	168	190
Moore	166	191	144
Allen	159	166	158
Mooney	159	186	188
	807	886	837

The Pan-American team's totals were 717, 741 and 717.

George M. Moss will read a paper on the "Cutting, Packing and Shipping of Cut Flowers" before the February meeting of the Florists' Club.

David Cliffe, of Germantown, has a nice lot of small pteris and other ferns for ferneries.

J. Otto Thilow, of Henry A. Dreer, will read a paper on "Flower Seeds" before the Germantown Horticultural Society at the February meeting.

Edwin Lonsdale visited Harrisburg last week for the purpose of arranging final details for a Farmers' Institute meeting for this city.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Stock continues to be scarce, and, as last week, roses taking the lead in this respect. The demand remains about the same, that is, considerably in excess of the supply, and prices consequently are up to the top notch. The grower who can cut a fair number of first-class flowers now, certainly is reaping a harvest, but there are very few who are able to do it. Most establishments are way off crop, with very little prospects for a relief for some time to come, and the majority of the stock cut, in the rose line, is of an inferior grade.

Carnations are doing much better than roses and they form the bulk of the stock coming in and are of first-class quality; the greater portion of them belonging to the medium and fancy grades. That the ordinary grade of carnations are taking a back seat can easily be seen by taking a round of the wholesale houses. All of the fancy grades are sold almost before they arrive; but the poorer grades, which a few years ago formed the entire supply of carnations, are now to be had at most any time.

The public is beginning to know and appreciate a good carnation when they see one and are willing to pay for it. The time will come when it will be almost impossible to dispose of the ordinary grades. It will be well for the grower to study what the public demands, and then grow it. The man who anticipates the popular demand, and supplies it, is the man who makes the money.

Bulbous stock is about as reported last week, with Harrisii and callas still scarce and selling at top prices. Romans are not going quite as well as they might, some selling in large lots as low as $1 per 100, and in some cases for less. Narcissus is being held firmly at quoted prices. A few tulips are to be seen, but they come with very short stems, and are not much called for; 2 to 4 cents is the price.

Various Items.

Several bills are being prepared to present to the Ohio legislature, now in session, to beautify and extend our city parks. One will call for a bond issue of $2,000,000 to be expended by a park board appointed by the mayor, in buying property and making new parks, making a circuit of parks connected by a fine driveway. Another bill calls for an appropriation of $50,000 to be used in finishing the parks we now have, the present superintendent, Mr. B. P. Critchell, having charge of same.

A. Sunderbruch's Sons are out $11, the work of a check swindler. A man ordered some goods for one of their customers and gave a check in payment, receiving $11 change. On delivering the flowers they found that none had been ordered, and that the check was N. G.

Ben George has two children sick with measles.

Miss Cooper, the energetic manager of the cut flower department at the Fair, is very sick, threatened with typhoid fever.

All florists on their way to the carnation meeting at Indianapolis, intending to accept the invitation of the Cincinnati boys to take in some of our leading establishments, will please drop a card to that effect to E. G. Gillett, 113 East Third Street, this city.

Visitors during the past week were: Mr. John Hartje, of Indianapolis, Ind.; Wm. Lodder, of Hamilton, Ohio, and Mr. James Hartshorne of Chicago.

UTICA, N. Y.

At their last meeting the Utica Florists' Club decided to have a carnation meeting on Feb. 6, 1902, when they are in hopes to show the new varieties kindly promised us by the originators and many of the older sorts, and we are also to have a lecture by G. C. Hodges, Professor of Sciences of the Utica Free Academy. We find that our question box is both very beneficial and interesting. Our club is in a very prosperous condition, new members being added at every meeting.

Business is very good at present; good demand for all good stock. There will be some building here this summer if reports are correct; some additions and some new places; one florist intends to put up nine houses 20x150, and another four or five 20x150.

Following are the scores of the bowlers Monday evening, Jan. 20:

Charles G. Seitzer, a very well known young Utican, died at the family residence, 38 Oswego street, Tuesday, January 21, after an illness of three weeks' duration with typhoid fever. Mr. Seitzer was the son of C. F. Seitzer, the well known florist. The florists of Utica joined in expressing their sympathy by sending a large roll of honor.

Mr. S. S. Skidelsky called upon the trade on Thursday and he does not forget to ask you, Have you bought the Nelson yet? If you haven't, he dives down in another pocket and brings forth any amount of price lists to suit the occasion, and if you escape all of them without buying you are saved.

Trade continues good. Quite a shortage in roses and carnations. S.

FREEPORT, ILL.—Louis Bauseher has just completed a new house 18x50 for general stock. This gives him 5,000 feet of glass in the greenhouse plant, which is used principally for general stock and for foreing lettuce. He also has 2,000 feet of glass for hot beds, which are used for vegetables and bedding plants. One house will be devoted entirely to growing cyclamen for the trade, of which about 10,000 will be grown this season, of the choicest American and European strains.

Stock has shortened up considerably the past week and the demand was brisk, especially on roses. Carnations, with exception of white, were abont equal to demand. Romans are coming in in fair quantities, but demand is light. Violets are about equal to demand. Some Harrisii were shipped in the past week, but being badly bruised in transit did not bring the prices they should bring otherwise. Callas are not overplentiful, and there is a good demand for them.

The Chicago Florists' Club bowlers came up Saturday night and took the games and the scores home with them. After the games all went to the Exposition arrayed in costumes to represent a German band. The annual brewers' mask ball was in session there and it is needless to say all had a good time. It's rather quiet in town today. INCOG.

A NURSERY SCHOOL OF BOTANY.

An innovation that is not only unique and quite original but useful as well has recently been made by Thomas Meehan & Sons, the nurserymen and landscape engineers, of Germantown, Phila. This concern has established for its employes a school of botany with a systematic course of study, and it has already met with great encouragement.

This school is under the direct personal care of Mr. S. Mendelson Meehan, a member of the firm, and Mr. Ernest Hemming, a Kew graduate, who is a specialist in herbaceous plants and in charge of that department for the firm. The former teaches the advanced members of the class and the latter instructs the younger element. Both express themselves as being well pleased with the progress of their pupils.

Every employe is eligible, from the veteran who has grown gray in the service to the apprentice who puts in time washing pots. It is surprising and encouraging to see what interest all the members of the class take and what progress they make.

For the nursery worker the benefits to be gained by studying botany can be readily seen. The advantage such a class has to make the most of its studies on a large and complete nursery may be well appreciated. The meetings are held in the evenings and the course has been so arranged to make it interesting and to eliminate as far as possible the natural dryness of the study.

BUFFALO.

Bowling.

From the fact that the Buffalo florists have not bowled together as a team since the S. A. F. convention, held in this city last summer, it seems as if the game was killed in the tournament held on that disastrous Saturday.

Get together, boys. And in order to start the ball a rolling, we, the All Scott's Bowling Club, would like to bowl any five florists in the city on the new Palace alleys. Address any acceptance of the above challenge to Various Notes.

For about two weeks after the holidays the demand for cut flowers was not very good, but at the present time it is good. Roses and white carnations are not up to the demand.

The old State Horticultural Society has just been revived here. A three-day meeting was held January 22, 23 and 24, which was largely attended by horticulturists from all parts of the state. The old society was merged into a horticultural bureau of which the governor of the state appointed the officers. The horticulturists who met here seem to think that it is only run politically and that the officers appointed do not know much about horticulture, and therefore it is of no benefit to the horticulturists of the state. One afternoon was given up to the Denver Florists' Club, which decorated the hall in fine shape, and had several of its members down for essays. Those of special note were by our ex-President A. J. Graham and R. Schuetze. On the day before a paper was read by J. A. Valentine on "Perennials."

The Denver Florists' Club elected their officers at the regular meeting January 10 as follows: John Satterthwaite, president; E. W. Davies, first vice-president; Robert Kurth, second vice-president; F. T. Rushmore, secretary; and A. M. Lewis, treasurer.

CENSUS STATISTICS.

The new census statistics on establishments making the cultivation of flowers and ornamental plants their principal business have been issued by the department at Washington.

The figures show for the United States a total of 6,159 such establishments, cultivating and using in their business 42,647 acres, of which 34,692 are improved land. The value of the land and buildings used by these establishments is $50,619,866, of which $22,654,756 represents the buildings alone. The value of implements and machinery for these establishments is $1,367,087.

Products, including the flowers grown in greenhouses and fields and farm crops on lands controlled by them, are worth $18,387,420. The amount expended by these establishments for fertilizer was $318,298 and for labor $4,125,799.

FORGET-ME-NOT.

Messrs. Hartmann & Wagenfohr, Winfield Junction, N. Y., send us a bunch of sprays of their forget-me-not. The sprays were very pretty and stems long and strong. They write that they have been cutting from the same plants since middle of August. It is a strong grower and bears considerable forcing. Stems 15 to 18 inches long are not infrequent, especially if some disbudding is done. The plants are placed 15 inches apart on the bench. They find a ready sale for the flowers in the New York market and have found it a paying crop.

Skaneateles, N. Y.—The two houses recently erected by J. G. White are 20x80. He used the Garland iron gutter, and says it has proved very satisfactory to date. He contemplates adding another new house, 18x80, the coming season.

INDEPENDENCE, MO.

Now that we have been given free mail delivery and can boast of three enterprising florists, each one the owner of a neat little range of greenhouses, we ask to be given a notice occasionally in your valuable paper.

We cannot complain of business, but rain is sadly needed, as the country hereabouts is as dry now as it was last July.

Ed Bunyar, who holds forth at the north end, has recently built a $2,500 residence, which stands as a monument to his thrift and business ability. He grows some cut flowers, the revenue derived therefrom paying all his running expenses. His specialty is young rooted plants and he says a regular ad. in the classified column of the Review brings him more orders than he gets from issuing a catalogue.

Alfred Broman has never tired of the east end of the town where he owns 30,000 feet of glass, growing cut flowers and flowering plants. He has but one wholesale customer, Miss Dally, of Kansas City, who takes 90 per cent of his production. Mr. Broman is an indefatigable worker and puts heart and soul into his business.

The 20,000 feet of glass built last summer by R. S. Brown & Son is located on the west side and was erected for growing cut flowers exclusively for their Kansas City trade. Roses and carnations are in splendid condition and the houses are a model for cleanliness, which reflects great credit on Mr. Nathan Brown, who superintended the building of the houses and assumed the management.

TAXES.

F. B. asks: "Do I have to pay taxes on greenhouse stock?" It is a matter that is interpreted differently in different localities, and no general rule can be given. In some places greenhouse plants are exempt, being classed as growing crops, and in others they are assessed as personal property. As each taxing body makes its own laws, and often different assessors interpret them differently, the only advice that can be given is to make an appeal to the board of review or equivalent body in your county and secure a ruling in the matter.

Dreer's Garden Calendar for 1902 has been issued and a copy has reached us. It contains over 200 pages and four colored plates, as well as having a colored cover. The stock catalogued is very comprehensive, covering seeds, bulbs, plants, shrubs, tools, supplies, etc. It seems sufficient to say that it is quite an advance on the handsome and useful catalogues previously issued by this well-known house. If you have not received a copy you can undoubtedly obtain one by addressing a request to Henry A. Dreer, 714 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

We cannot do without our Review, the best paper of its kind going.—W. P. Lyon, Niagara Falls, Ont.

Club Meeting.

At a regular meeting of the Florists' Club Monday evening quite a discussion took place as to the best time to plant carnations inside. Mr. H. Hart gave it as his opinion that from the first to the fifteenth of July was the proper time, while Mr. I. Kennedy, of the J. M. Gasser Co., gave it as his opinion that from the middle of July to the middle of August was as good a time as any. S. N. Pentecost gave his experience with growing them inside all summer. He seemed to think that it was not altogether a success, except in the case of Bradts, Eldorado and Gen. Gomez, claiming that he got better plants and flowers from these varieties grown inside than those that were lifted. It seemed to be his opinion that the extra quality of flowers hardly paid for the extra labor and expense of taking care of the plants through the summer months.

The great amount of watering necessary through the hot weather seemed to pack and bake the ground so that now it is almost impossible to get the soil to take up the fertilizer necessary to make the plants grow. Some advocated the watering of the plants in the field, while others thought that a very bad policy. It seemed to be the consensus of opinion to get the plants out as early as possible, have them make as large a growth as possible and keep them in good, healthy condition, and then, last but not least, get them in the houses by or before the first week of August and then they will give a good account of themselves by the holidays.

Notes.

George Smith, formerly of Smith & Son, reports trade very satisfactory. By the way, he has a seedling carnation which is very promising, some of the growers here claiming that it is the best seedling up to date seen around Cleveland.

The members of the club intending to visit the carnation meeting have partially mapped out the route. They will probably visit Cincinnati, Richmond and New Castle on the way to Indianapolis and expect to return by the way of Lafayette and Chicago, intending the trip to cover about one week.

Those of the craft on the sick list are all improving. Mr. E. A. Fetters expects to leave for Arizona about the first of February to be gone three years at least.

Mr. J. M. Gasser, of the J. M. Gasser Co., has left for an extended trip to Florida and Cuba. TENEP.

We have received a copy of the 101st successive annual seed catalogue of J. M. Thorburn & Co., New York, and it is certainly a credit to this old established and well known firm. A most excellent feature is the large number of fine half tone engravings from photographs, most excellently printed on fine paper. The cost of these plates is, of course, much greater than that of the stock wood cuts that have seen so much service, but the effect is so far superior, to say nothing of their absolute truthfulness, that the expense is surely warranted. Possible buyers of seeds who have not received a copy can no doubt obtain one by addressing J. M. Thorburn & Co., 36 Cortlandt street, New York.

Market Conditions.

Business was rather quiet the first week after the holidays, especially the retail trade, then the wholesale business started in with a rush and has remained steady ever since, with retail trade fair. Carnations and violets are the only flowers that are sufficiently plentiful to meet the demand, with red carnations scarce and white none too plentiful. Roses are completely off crop. Harrisii lilies are in fair supply, while there are a few paper whites and other bulbous stock to be seen at the stores.

Prices: Carnations, 35 to 50 cents per dozen; roses, $1 per dozen; callas and Harrisii, $2 per dozen; violets, 15 to 25 cents per dozen, and of good quality.

The weather has been mild until Saturday, when another blizzard struck us. The outlook for a coal famine is good: should a snowstorm arise to impede railroad traffic the coal supply would be exhausted in one week, and what then—freeze out.

The annual pilgrimage of the drummer has begun: one from the Ionia Pottery Co. and a representative from W. W. Barnard & Co. were here the past week. G. F. C.

RICHMOND, IND.

At the last meeting of the Richmond Florists' Club there was a full attendance and roses was the subject for discussion. Mr. James Hartshorne, manager of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., was present and favored the club with an interesting impromptu address. The discussion on roses will be continued at the next meeting.

A committee consisting of John Evans, Homer Schepman, Geo. Gauze, Ed Fulle and Charles Knopf was appointed by President Lemon as an entertainment committee, to look after the comfort and welfare of all visiting florists on the occasion of the American Carnation Society's meeting, at Indianapolis, Feb. 19, and the secretary was instructed to inform all through the trade papers that all visitors to Richmond would be met at the train by the committee, upon notifying the chairman of the committee, John Evans, as to the time of their probable arrival.

The entertainment committee will prepare a program and report to the club at a meeting to be called by President Lemon before the meeting at Indianapolis. H. C. Chessman, Secretary.

Chariton, Ia.—At the meeting of the Southwest Iowa Florists' Association, recently held here, officers were elected as follows: President, J. F. Wilcox, Council Bluffs; financial secretary, C. G. Anderson, Red Oak; corresponding secretary, I. C. Hon, Creston. The next meeting will be held in Des Moines.

It has good long stiff stems. We think that it will be a standard variety. Yours truly, Erica Fragrans in Bloom for Christmas at the Establishment of Mr. Carl Hagenburger, West Mentor, Ohio.

ERICA FRAGRANS.

The accompanying engraving shows a lot of pot plants of heather (Erica fragrans) at the establishment of Mr. Carl Hagenburger, West Mentor, Ohio, and is from a photograph taken just before Christmas. In response to our request for a description of his method of growing this erica Mr. Hagenburger writes:

"Erica fragrans in its growing season in winter enjoys a cool house (temperature from 45 to 48 degrees), and frequent syringing is required to keep down red spider. In summer they should be plunged outside in the open air and in full sunlight, and should have a good syringing twice a day.

"They should be brought inside as soon as the nights get cold, and if placed in a house with a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees they will come in right for Christmas. If wanted later in the season keep in a cool, airy house till three weeks before they are wanted and if then brought into a temperature of 55 to 58 they will open fine."

THRIPS.

Some time ago I advocated through your columns the use of cayenne pepper to exterminate thrips and gave directions as to the method of using it. Knowing it to be certain destruction to them, I was somewhat disappointed to learn that some growers had failed to derive any benefit from its use. In one of the trade journals I see that Mr. M. S. Vesey has been using it with success. Mr. Kellogg also informs me that he has nearly overcome the pest by the same means. By persisting with the pepper success is sure to be attained. For a considerable time I have been experimenting with the view of finding some quicker method of accomplishing their destruction without doing the plants an injury.

Most growers have a prejudice against the use of kerosene because of its destructive qualities to plant life. If diffused, as in the case of an emulsion, it is one of the best insecticides extant. If used in the following manner it will destroy all the larvae in a few minutes. Use one part rose soil and two parts leaf mould, dry out all the moisture and screen through wire mosquito netting, moisten with kerosene till it becomes mellow, spread this thinly and evenly over the bench and ruffle it lightly in with the hand. This will not kill the perfect insect but will cause it to leave the shelter of the mulch, and then an ordinary smoking will reach it. This operation should be done during the late afternoon and the house smoked immediately afterwards. In the course of three or four days another generation will be hatched out and a repetition of the dose will then become necessary.

To make certain that the labor will not be in vain try one-quarter pound of the compost on some part of the bench where the larvæ are most plentiful; watch them closely for a couple of minutes and note the result. There is not the least danger of injury to either plants or bloom. RIBES.

CARNATIONS.

Varieties for Outdoor Blooming.

In the Jan. 23 issue of the REVIEW Mr. Baur says that Hill and Crocker are the best varieties of their color for outdoor summer bloom. We have always grown Scott and Fisher for that particular purpose, as he says all old timers do. Crocker is a new variety with us and we never tried to bloom it in the field, but Hill has been practically our only white for years except a seedling of our own which we consider even better and not so liable to stem rot. But while Hill grows well enough in the field the flowers soil too easily; even the dew spots them to such an extent as to make them unsalable. Are other growers troubled in the same way? L. G.

In answer to L. G.'s inquiry regarding carnations for summer blooming I would say that we have experienced no trouble with Flora Hill spotting unless they were left on the plants too long and got wet and dry several times before they were picked. This, however, will be found in most varieties out of doors and most likely it is caused more by the hot sun during the day than by the dew at night. We find Flora Hill by far the best white summer bloomer up to date, and would not think of going back to Mrs. Fisher or McGowan. Louise C. Haettel was another white variety we grew for summer blooms several years ago.

Scott has for several years been the main summer blooming pink variety, and as far as quantity goes it would be hard to beat, but the blooms are small and often too single to command a fair price. I would not say positively that E. Crocker will come into bloom quite as early as Scott does, but it comes in quite early enough to suit us. You can cut large quantities of blooms from it by August if you plant out strong plants and only pinch them once soon after they are potted out of the cutting bench. One bloom of Crocker will make about three Scotts, and it fully makes up in that way what it may lack in numbers.

It seems to me that Dorothy ought to make a fine summer bloomer, as it is so very early and so free. The color should also be better in summer than it is in winter. If you have any stock of it I would recommend a trial of as many as you can spare.

Stem Rot.

Is there any lotion or spray to be used as a preventive of stemrot? Last year we didn't lose a dozen plants out of about 6,000 with stemrot. This year we have lost as many hundred. Usually with us it has confined its ravages to Hill. This year it seems equally fond of McGowan and Scott. Our own seedlings and the newer varieties seem to be entirely free from the disease. We have used that alleged sovereign remedy, air slaked lime, freely in the field and under glass without any perceptible benefit. Would Bordeaux mixture be a good thing to spray with? L. G.

A bad dose of stemrot at this time of the year is about as mean a thing to handle as I know of. The most essential thing is to keep the plants as dry as possible and especially the stem, so there must be very little syringing unless it is absolutely necessary on account of red spider or some such reason. When watering turn on the water so it will flow from the hose without any force and run the end of the hose between the rows just above the soil and be careful that you do not splash any water on the plants. If the water will soak away without running over to the plants it will be all the better. The roots will get to it down below. A good plan would be to make a furrow about two inches wide and one inch deep and only water in that. Examine your plants and see if they have been set in the soil too deep and if so you can scrape some of the soil away from around the plant. Sprinkling lime or any other disinfectant will do no good if the plants are set too low.

The Bordeaux mixture is a good solution to check all kinds of fungus and it might help L. G.'s carnations. It appears to me from his statement (that they have had trouble with Flora Hill several seasons and that now all the old varieties are giving trouble) that their stock is badly infested with the disease and it would be advisable to burn up all the old plants after the blooming season is over and either buy young cuttings this spring or else field-grown plants next fall, thus changing his stock of all the varieties that had any of the disease. Also plant no more carnations in the field where they were planted in the last five years or more, an entirely new field would be the best place for them. The fungus is apt to remain in the soil for several years in a dormant condition, ready to attack the plants at the next opportunity. That is where the benefit of rotation in crops comes in and all good gardeners practice it just as much as they can.

It is also well to bear in mind that everything you do to help your plants to make a steady, strong growth will help them to fight off all these diseases. It is very difficult to reach the stem of a carnation plant when spraying unless it is literally drenched with the stuff. Keep the ventilators open as much as possible to keep the air circulating and fresh. I said in a recent article that you should not pot up a cutting that had the least sign of fungus while in the cutting bench, as it will surely crop out sooner or later in the form of stemrot. This is a disease that you cannot fight too hard.

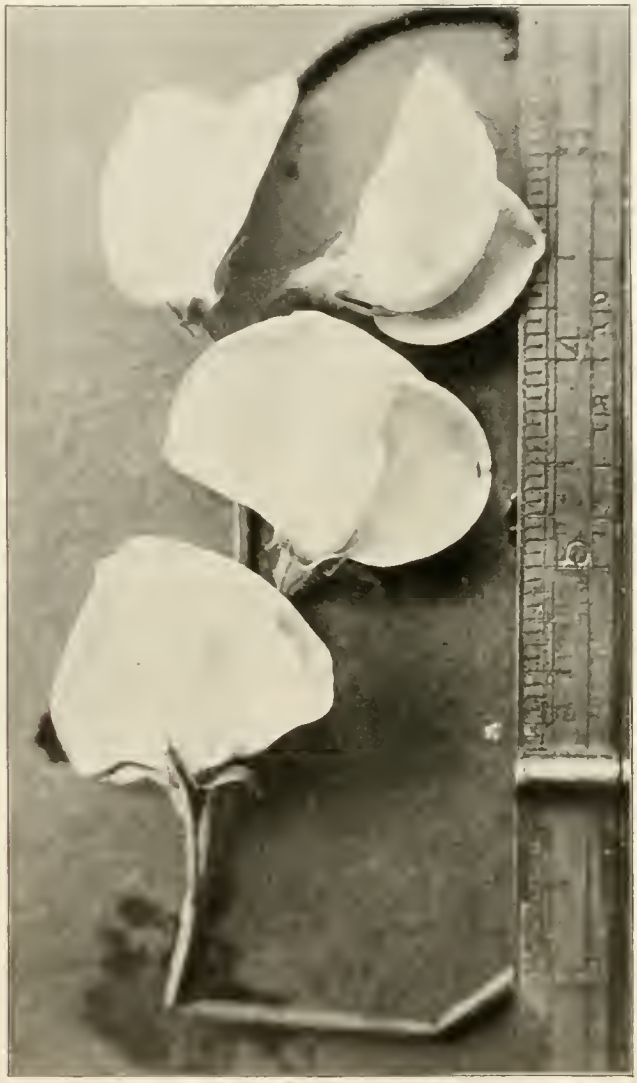
SWEET PEA MISS FLORENCE E. DENZER.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of this new white sweet pea, a seedling raised by Mr. Ant. C. Zvolanek, Grand View, N. J. Some specimen blooms sent us last week by Mr. Zvolanek showed it to be a fine bloom, the size shown in the picture, with long, strong stems and generally desirable. The picture was taken December 24.

Mr. Zvolanek also sent us blooms of



New White Sweet Pea Miss Florence E. Denzer.

THE INDIANAPOLIS MEETING.

The trade papers are full of invitations for the delegates to the convention and just by way of a little caution it might be well to state that to secure the fare of a rate and one-third, no stop over privileges are allowed unless they can be made with your local ticket agent for the way going out. This is one serious disadvantage for us carnation men, as we like to make all sorts of stops right in the growing season, but if we expect to get and hold this rate and one-third it will not do for many parties to buy their tickets in any other way, for if we are one short on the hundred we will not get the rate. A. M. Herr.

his Christmas (improved) which has markings somewhat similar to those of Blanche Ferry, but with a much deeper pink shade. It is certainly a beautiful flower.

Seed was sown September 5, outdoors in three to four inch pots, and the plants were planted inside in solid beds October 20, following a crop of early chrysanthemums. The temperature was kept at 45 degrees at night and 60 to 68 degrees during the daytime. The plants came in full crop for Christmas and will keep bearing flowers till June.

ONCIDIUMS.

Over 250 species of these orchids have been described, some of which are among our very finest subjects for cut flower work. The one most generally grown and known among the cut flower trade is Oncidium varicosum, and its form O. V. Rogersii, which has been imported to this country in vast quantities during the past few years. Many will recall the splendid showing the orchid made at the show in Madison Square Garden last fall, and for decorative work it has few equals.

Culturally speaking O. varicosum is one of the easiest subjects to grow after it is well started. In the early spring, when the young growths are pushing out from the last year's bulbs, some care must be exercised in the overhead watering. The young shoots are very delicate, and indiscriminate watering with the hose not infrequently results in many of these rotting away from the water lodging in the base of the leaves.

The best place to grow O. varicosum during the growing season is an intermediate house, that is to say, in a temperature ranging from 60 degrees nights to 75 degrees days. In such a temperature, if kept well supplied with water, and, after the bulb has formed frequently syringed, the plants will make fine bulbs. After the bulb has developed gradually inure the plant to more sunlight, that the growth may be thoroughly ripened, and then when the flower spike is beginning to push out, which it will in July or August, move the plants to a much cooler house. This is done to keep back the bloom as late as possible, because the demand for the flowers is much better in November than earlier in the season. Of course the plants can be made to flower by September, or even August if desired, but just at that time they are not in great request.

The plants seem to grow equally well in pots, pans, baskets, or nailed on rafts providing a sufficiency of water is supplied during the growing season. After the flowers are cut the plants must be kept cool and only enough water supplied to keep the bulbs from shriveling too much. In buying newly imported plants of O. varicosum I believe it is much better where possible to purchase plants in the early spring. Then you have a good season of growth and a good flower spike reasonably assured for the first year. Some importers claim that by importing plants later in the year the plants will make a later growth and flower for Christmas. While some of the plants will do this the percentage of such plants is not a very high one. The flowers on the panicles are not very numerous, and the first year is to a large extent lost.

I have heard it claimed that the life of O. varicosum under cultivation is only about two years, yet many of our plants at their fourth season of flowering, with us have come stronger than they ever did before. The question of orchids generally deteriorating under cultivation seems to rest more with the grower than with the plants themselves. Why should not orchids continue to grow indefinitely in our greenhouses, if they are only supplied with what they require?

O. varicosum should be relieved of its flower spikes as soon as possible after the flowers are fully developed, because the bulb is comparatively small and the drain on it to support a large spike of flowers will soon cause it to shrivel.

Oncidium tigrinum is another splendid species for cutting. It has a very faint violet odor and will be grown more extensively in the near future.

Oncidium Papilio, or the butterfly orchid, is an old and well known species. It cannot be said to have any value as a commercial cut flower, but it is one of the most singular of the species in its striking resemblance to a butterfly. The old spikes should not be cut away because one flower succeeds another on the same stem and will continue to do so for a long while. O. Papilio does best when given a reasonable exposure to the sun.

O. ornithorhynchum is another well known species. It is very free flowering, though probably the price that could be obtained would not be remunerative as the individual flowers are so small. This species has a delicate, delicious heliotrope odor, and on that account alone should be represented by a few plants in every collection.

As previously stated there are many more species other than the one or two here mentioned, and the list of those used for commercial cut flower work will doubtless increase when the plants can be bought reasonably cheap and in sufficient quantities. CHAS. H. TOTTY.

STOCK GERANIUMS.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of a house of stock geraniums of the varieties Beaute Poitevine and Mrs. E. G. Hill at the establishment of the W. T. Buckley Plant Co., Springfield, Ill.

The plants are all planted out in the bench just as carnations and roses are when grown for cut flowers But these geraniums are being grown merely for wood to supply cuttings. The house is run cool, so as to make well seasoned growth that will produce good cuttings. A crop of cuttings is taken off every two weeks, and of course the plants are never allowed to become drawn by permitting too much growth.

It is an interesting part of the system employed by what might be termed plant manufactories, where large quantities of plants are required for a shipping trade such as done by the firm named.

CABOMBA AND MYRIOPHYLLUM.

Replying to the inquiry of P. & P., both these aquatics are of easy culture. The cabomba will do well in an aquarium with even a foot of water and with a thin layer of loam in the bottom. The plants can be weighted to carry them down. They grow readily in ordinary greenhouse temperature. They are propagated by root division. The proper name is Cabomba Caroliniana, though viridifolia is often used.

Myriophyllum proserpinacoides (Parrot's Feather) is half hardy and grows readily in shallow water with soil at the bottom in ordinary temperature. It is readily increased by division.

FUNGICIDES.

In a recent number of the REVIEW, W. S., in discussing the management of propagating beds, recommends a solution of copper carbonate in ammonia for treating the bench and sand to prevent the growth of the fungi that cause damping off. At the same time he mentions having forgotten another valuable formula furnished to him by a friend. I have no doubt this was potassium sulfide, commonly known as Liver-of-Sulphur.

This is a valuable fungicide for general use in the greenhouse and when dissolved in water at the rate of one-half ounce to one gallon of water, may be used on the cutting bench freely without fear of injury to the cuttings. We have frequently checked damping both in the cutting bench and in seed boxes by a liberal use of this fungicide. Potassium sulfide may be purchased for 25 to 40 cents per pound, according to the dealer, and should be kept in an air-tight receptacle until used.

Use only in copper, wooden or glass vessels and apply as soon as dissolved, as the solution rapidly loses strength. For this reason it is recommended as a cure, killing at once all spores and mycelium of fungi, but quickly losing its efficiency. The copper compounds, ammoniacal copper carbonate, Bordeaux mixture, etc., retain their efficiency until removed, preventing the germination and growth of the spores.

VEGETABLES UNDER GLASS.

I was very glad to see in last week's number of the REVIEW an article on the forcing of lettuce. I have been in this business in a small way for the past three years. This year I have built four houses 125x18 feet with one, a fifth, running along the south end for tomatoes. I have an eighty-horse power boiler for heating which gives me plenty of capacity for more glass which I expect to put up the coming summer. When finished I will have in all about 17,000 feet of glass. In addition to the glass I have about four acres of land all under ditch, making it very easy to cultivate. The coming season I will put two of my houses in carnations, two in violets and the balance in vegetables, lettuce being the main crop.

The growing of vegetables under glass being a comparatively new thing, especially in the west, we who are in the business in this part of the country would be very glad to hear the experiences of others in the same line of business, and I am taking the liberty of writing you to ask if it would not be a good thing, and of considerable interest to the readers of your valuable paper, if we could have a few articles on the subject from some of our western growers. I will be glad to add to the general knowledge on the subject anything that I may have learned during my limited experience, and I feel sure there are others who would do so if they were asked.

WILLIAM H. EVANS.

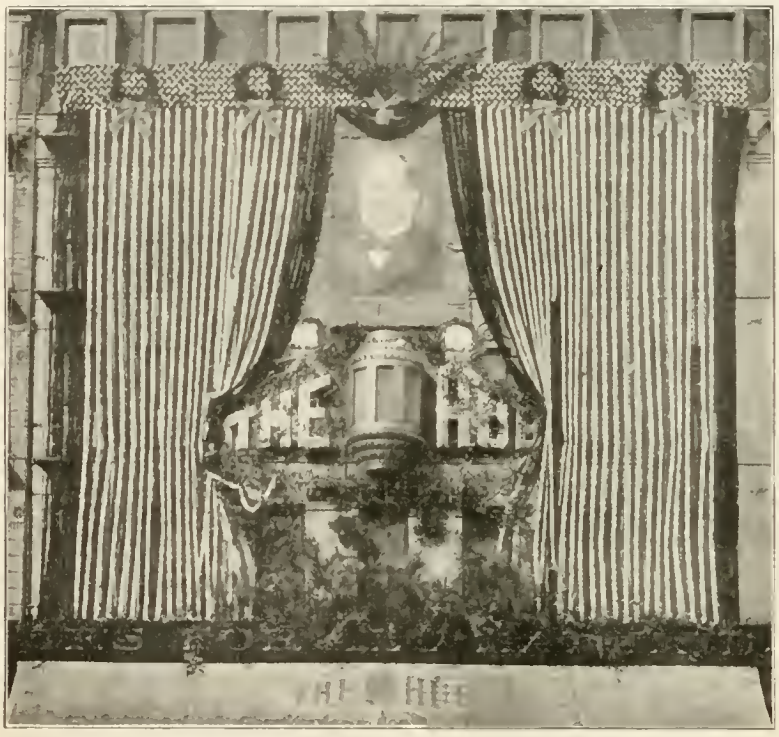
STORE DECORATIONS.

The George Wittbold Company, Chicago, have a department devoted to the decoration of stores for their various openings and other special events and have worked up quite a large business in this line. The enterprising managers of the large retail stores are always seeking means of making their establishments especially attractive to the public, and, while the work takes in many things not exactly germane to the florist's business, there is much of it that does, and plants and flowers are used wherever possible.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a store front decoration arranged by the Wittbold Company for The Hub, a Chicago clothing store, at the time of the funeral of the late President McKinley. It was decidedly the most effective decoration of the sort seen on Chicago's main business street at the time. The long streamers of black and white are paper festooning, which can be purchased in quantity at very moderate rates.



Store Front Decoration Arranged by the Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago.

Mr. Henry Wittbold, who is in charge of this department, is always on the lookout for new material available for such work, and gives his patrons as much change as possible. When a customer wishes a decoration he asks about how much money they are willing to spend, and then he makes a sketch showing what he can do for the money, and possibly another one showing what can be done for a somewhat larger amount. Where the price will not permit the use of real plants the perpetuated palms are used.

One original and very effective decoration arranged by him was for the "spring opening" of one of the large stores last year. He cut a large number of trees and upon these pink paper flowers simulating apple blossoms were wired in profusion. The patrons of the store could easily imagine themselves walking through an orchard of apple trees in bloom with counters of goods placed under them.

It seems to us that florists in other cities might find it profitable to pay a little more attention to the possibilities in this direction. The managers of these large stores are always trying to think up some plan for attracting the people, and a sketch of a really effective and striking decoration will generally land an order, and at a profitable figure if the matter is handled right. Of course plants and flowers should be worked in wherever possible.

A CARNATION HOUSE.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of a house of carnations at the establishment of Messrs. G. Van Bochove & Bro., Kalamazoo, Mich. Regarding this house their manager, Mr. J. J. Curran, writes:

"This house is one of a recently built block consisting of five houses. They have a south aspect, with a combination roof, the longest slope towards the south. The supports, bracings, purlins, etc., are of tubular iron. Height of the walls, 5½ feet; from floor to ridge pole, 13½ feet; width of house, 26 feet.

"The photo was taken ten weeks after planting. The variety showing in the foreground is Marquis, which has done remarkably well with us this season, having produced fine long stems ever since November. It shows no sign of going out of crop, but rather continuing to increase. It is certainly the finest pink fancy, and will here get more bench room next season."

SAN JOSE SCALE.

In Bulletin No. 17 of the New England Association of Park Superintendents appear a large number of communications from park superintendents regarding the San Jose scale. The great damage done to trees and shrubs where the scale has obtained a foothold is clearly shown and preventive measures are vigorously urged upon those in charge of trees and shrubs not yet affected. We print below several of these communications, showing the various methods that have been found successful in combating the pest.

Am sorry to report we have the San Jose scale in this city. I first discovered it three years ago, and since it has rapidly spread, and in my opinion there is no insect capable of doing more damage to fruit interests than this scale. It is so small and not striking in appearance and might remain undiscovered and yet continually spread, and certainly to my knowledge it is only a matter of two or three years before the tree is dead. In my opinion there is today from 2,000 to 3,000 trees affected in this city. One great trouble is to get the owners of trees interested, a portion of which seem unconcerned, while others are anxious to save their trees. My remedy is whale oil soap as recommended by L. O. Howard, United States department, Washington, two pounds to one gallon of water dissolved by heat. And on small trees where a pump is not at hand, as often is the case, I recommend the use of a window brush or a sponge attached to a pole. But the spray pump is best, for with its use we are more sure to cover all branches and twigs.

What trees and shrubs I have found the scale on are pear, plum, apple, peach, cherry, quince, Prunus Pissardii, quince (Japanese), lilac, currants, gooseberries, golden willow. Today while pruning I found a row of currants which were all destroyed with the exception of a portion of the new growth. I think there should be some act passed by our legislators providing for the extermination of this scale such as that presented by the state of New York found in Bulletin No. 3, New Series, United States Department of Agriculture, Division of Entomology.

Unless some rigid measures are applied I am afraid the fruit interests of the New England states will in a very few years become extinct. A. C. Capen, Supt. of Parks, Holyoke, Mass.

This is by far the worst scale pest the writer has had any experience with or has ever seen. In western Connecticut some four or five years ago, when it first became prevalent in that section, I detected it on a few dwarf pear trees. They were immediately taken and burned up. That season there did not seem to be any more signs of it, but the following season it made its appearance on so many different trees and shrubs that radical measures had at once to be adopted. It will cover a tree completely in one season and in two or three seasons at the utmost will have entirely killed it.

The different varieties of prunus and pyrus have always been the worst affected that have come under my notice. I consider the best time to destroy the pest is during the late winter months, for then all trees and shrubs may be thoroughly sprayed without injury to buds, but summer treatment is also necessary if the pest is to be thoroughly kept in check. The best remedy I ever found was crude petroleum. I have in many cases sprayed this without diluting with no injurious effects whatever to tree growth and completely destroyed the scale. I do not like kerosene, for in order to have it strong enough to destroy the scale it will prove injurious to tree growth. I have tried it in many different proportions of strength and remember using it pure on a batch of plum trees that had a magnificent lot of San Jose scale on them. I am glad to say I succeeded in destroying that lot of scale—trees also.

Like other pests, it will be impossible to thoroughly clear a locality of it, for there are many places where it will take hold and not receive any attention. I have seen it plentiful on wild apple trees, thorns, etc. There is another remedy which I have great hopes of doing a large share in destroying this pernicious scale, especially in wild locations where it will not receive the attention of the spraying machine. I refer to the lady-bugs, "Coccinillidae." These dear little beetles are very carnivorous. I have counted dozens of some of the species on a single apple tree that was scale infested, and they were certainly playing havoc with the newly hatched scales.

In conclusion there are many remedies for destroying the scale. My theory is to have something that will adhere to the tree bark long enough to seal the scale in, as it were, thus destroying it, and whatever is used the main thing is, do it thoroughly; do not miss a single branch and do not depend on one application as enough. In most cases two or three will be necessary. J. W. Duncan,
Asst. Supt. of Parks, Boston, Mass.

Hartford and the vicinity here around is badly infested by the dreaded San Jose scale, and, of course, our parks have not wholly escaped its ravages. It was first discovered on some old Elaegnus argentea and Prunus Pissardii in Bushnell Park about four years ago. Those infested plants were cut down and burned, and for a time Bushnell Park was apparently free from the insect. Last winter the scale was found there again, but in limited number, especially on older plants of Elaegnus argentea, Prunus Pissardii, mountain ash and various sorts of crataegus and cornus. These plants were immediately sprayed with a solution of whale oil soap, kerosene and water. This, I think, had the desired effect.

The scale was also discovered last winter in what we call Sigourney square, in a lot of old Cornus stolonifera. Those were pretty badly infested, and to make a clean and sure job of it they were cut down and burned. The surrounding plants, although no scale was visible on them, were immediately sprayed with the before mentioned solution. This park is now apparently free from the insect, although just across the street from it any amount of the scale can be found.

In Pope Park we have found the scale sparingly on the younger plantings, although the plants were clean when planted. In cases of this sort the plants may be dug up and fumigated, which, I think, is very effective. For that reason we have here a wooden box 19x6x5 feet erected, containing 570 cubic feet. It is lined with heavy paper on the inside so as to make it as tight as possible. It opens from the top. On one side, near the bottom at the middle of the box, is an opening 10x12 inches, and a sort of cage inside. Here the chemicals are placed and the opening quickly closed. It requires for a box with a capacity of 570 cubic feet filled with plants: 4½ oz. of potash cyanidum, 7 oz. of sulphuric acid, grade 184, and 11 oz. of water.

When fumigating proceed in the following order: First, place the infested plants in the box and put on the cover. In order to let as little as possible of the highly poisonous fumes escape, cover the top of the box with heavy bags or matting. Second, when preparing the chemicals use a low, glazed vessel, with wide opening, holding about three quarts. Put in the acid first, then the water very carefully, and stir slowly with a stake. Place the vessel in the cage inside of the box, then very carefully put in the potash cyanidum, which should be in a paper bag, bag and all. Close the shutter quickly and leave the box hurriedly. In half an hour the lid of the box may be opened, but take care not to breath when in the vicinity of the box. In five to six hours' time the plants can be safely removed and the box refilled if desired.

Fumigating in this manner is very cheap and kills the insects. As a precaution it should be done whenever new stock is purchased and received. Large shrubs or plantings may be fumigated in the same manner without being removed if covered with a large piece of cloth or tent.

The breeding place of the San Jose scale is the back yards of small city residences, where a few apple, pear and peach trees are grown, and as long as we cannot compel the owners to burn or clean their infested trees we will have a pretty hard thing to fight. Nevertheless, I believe that with a close watch and quick action we can do much to check its ravages and to keep it in bounds.

Robert Karlstrom,
Forester Department of Public Parks,
Hartford, Conn.

Experiments to demonstrate the effect of electric light on plants being forced for flowers are being carried on at the Agricultural College at Lansing, Mich. Two beds of carnations are treated in exactly the same way, except that at night one bed has incandescent electric lights over it. It is said that this bed has produced flowers considerably larger than those from the other one.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions for Jan. 27–31.

There was some criticism among the growers and local retailers concerning lack of business, but really I do not see how things could well have been expected better, especially with the assistance of a very busy day upon Saturday, Feb. 1, when practically everything was closed out of all wholesale places.

Red roses and smaller grades of other kinds were scarce all the week. Prices on the former could have been raised if goods were produced, but as the latter can only be used in funeral work exorbitant prices cannot be obtained, while cheap flowers of other kinds are fairly plentiful. Pinks, violets, lilies, bulb material, etc., now take the place of them very nicely, so that the situation moves along without friction. Large roses of those colors seem plentiful enough, some of them bringing $3 per dozen.

Of course prices vary to irregular customers almost daily, but this class of trade can expect better usage soon. They fit into the subject much like the three blind men who went to see the elephant, as told in an ingenious old poem. One ran against his side and reported the beast as much resembling a wall. The one who so approached as to first find a leg got the impression that he resembled a tree, while the third man grasped the trunk and swore the elephant was a huge species of snake. The buyer's idea of floral Boston depends upon the day he comes in contact with it and how many times he has seen the elephant before! At times it is very like a wall, impassable and insurmountable; at other times rather snakish, and again like a tree, whose fruit can almost be had for the asking.

Notes.

M. E. Tuohy, the South Boston representative of that family, has been confined to his room by a severe cold, threatening pneumonia.

There is a rumor to the effect that the Tremont store occupied by W. E. Doyle and other stores in the vicinity are to come down in order to make room for a huge new block to run back to Pemberton square.

Trade and Various Items.

In these notes of two weeks ago exulting mention was made of the superb winter weather enjoyed in this quarter for the preceding ten days. Since that writing and up to this (February 3) out of nine days we have had one of sunshine, the balance comprising a varied and exasperating assortment of howling winds, heavy snows, chilling rains and gloomy skies, enough to sink the most optimistic temperament into the depths of the blues. As a result flowers have been scarce, poor, and lacking color, and all the ills that prey on plants which cannot be syringed and properly cared for are present in abundance.

Notwithstanding these unfavorable features, trade has been good, very good. There was probably never a livelier social season than this, and almost every day brings more demands upon the florist than the supply can meet. In roses, prices are firm, though the quantity begins to increase. The same cannot be said of the quality. American Beauties in this market, at the present time, are non est. Carnations are more plentiful, and prices are a shade lower, ranging from $1.50 to $3 per 100, good Flora Hills, White Clouds and reds bringing $3, and fancies $3.50. Green stuff is scarce; violets are scarce also, and not up to the standard by any means.

There is little news to report. Some building will be done, of which notice may appear hereafter.

The Gardeners' Club will hold a carnation show on the 24th.

A bill has been introduced into the legislature to remodel the park board, providing that the president shall be a landscape gardener, who must have been for five years in the actual practice of his profession. His salary is fixed at $3,000 a year, and the other members are to be selected from the various geographical districts of the city.

It is reported that cupid has invaded the domain of Flora and that several maids and bachelors more or less intimately connected with the trade here will shortly change their conditions in life. R.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The cut flower trade has been generally brisk the past week, and prospects are bright for a good trade from now until Lent. The quality of the rose stock coming in is very inferior and first-class stock is scarce. The commission men say that good prices are obtained for all stock and that they are soon sold out each day. Funeral work was plentiful the past week; nearly every florist in town reports trade as brisk in this line, but that the delivery of large pieces was difficult owing to the very cold weather.

Wholesale prices on stock the past week were as follows: Good Beauties, $5 to $6, and very scarce at that; seconds, $1 to $2 per doz.; Brides, Maids, Meteors and Gates, from $5 to $8 per 100; good Perles, very scarce at $5 and $6.

Carnations are quite plentiful and the demand is very good, very few being left after the morning sales are over. Daybreak, Scott and Joost sell at $2 and $3; first grades in Lawson, White Cloud and Crane bring $4; scarlets are not overplentiful.

Violets have gone up to $1 per 100 for California and are not any too plentiful; doubles are down to 50 cents, with very little sale for them.

In bulb stock Romans and paper whites are very plentiful, but owing to the scarcity of other stock have a good call. The different grades sell at from $1.50 to $3; daffs, $3 to $4; valley, $3 to $4. The tulip market is very uncertain and these flowers are selling very slowly. Harrisii is small and soft and brings from 10 to 15 cents; callas are in good demand at 10 cents each. Smilax is selling much better than for some time past and there is a good demand for all greens.

The above prices will no doubt hold until Lent, which begins February 12.

Visitors.

Visitors in town this week are: Arnold Ringier, representing W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago; Jos. Rolker, of New York; J. E. Killen, of Detroit, and Wm. Trillow, of Chicago. All are selling florists' supplies.

Mr. J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, was in town the past week and reports having had a good time while in Chicago. He says he learned a great deal by visiting the large places around Chicago.

Club Meeting.

The next meeting of the club will be held Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock and President Meinhardt expects a full attendance. The carnation show promises to be large and all the new varieties will be on exhibition. Two essays on carnations will be read, and other important matters will come up for discussion which will require every member to be present.

Bowling.

The Florist bowlers had lots of fun last Friday night at the expense of the Olympic bowlers, and the three games went to the former's credit. Our club is now second in the race for the championship.

Following are the scores, which show how the games were won:

MISSING REPORTS.

The mails have been seriously delayed by the very severe weather, which no doubt accounts for the fact that matter has not been received in time for this issue from several of our regular correspondents.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—The Salt Lake Floral Co. has filed articles of incorporation. The capital stock is $25,000.

I LIKE the REVIEW and would not be without it.—FRANK MOSSMILLER, Richmond, Va.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The weather has been exceedingly unpleasant the past week, a mixture of rain, snow, sleet and a high wind. It was not a banner week among the wholesalers, though a slight improvement was noted toward its close. Violets are over abundant and in poor demand. The very best stock was selling Saturday at $1 per 100 and selling slowly. I would hate to tell you what "medium" violets and those "born yesterday" were bringing.

Carnations of the standard varieties brought from $1 to $2, while the extra stock sold at $3 to $6, and a few novelties as high as $10 to $12. The best Beauties brought as high as $75, but few went at that figure, $50 to $60 being the average for the fancies. Liberty commanded, for extras, $5 a dozen. Brides, Maids, Meteors and Kaiserins ranged from $3 to $15 a hundred; Valley, $2 to $4; tulips and narcissus, $3 to $5; mignonette, $2 to $5 for ordinary and $8 to $12 for fancy; Harrisii and callas, $8 to $12; hyacinths, $1 to $2; smilax, $10 to $12; cyps, $10 to $12; cattleyas, $25 to $40.

Notes.

This week may be called a "dinner" week. The seventh annual dinner of the New Jersey Floricultural Society will be held in Elks' Hall, Orange, on Wednesday evening, February 5, and a good many from New York intend "taking it in."

Then Saturday evening the "Roast Beef of Old England," or New England, has its innings, and the New York Florists' Club will celebrate. These annual beefsteak dinners are becoming very popular. This will be the club's second "try," and Julius Lang, who carries the burden of responsibility, has actually grown bald thinking out plans to make it unapproachable.

The gathering will be large and very informal, but I may safely inform you that the wisdom of having the dinner on a Saturday night is unquestioned. Julius has an elegant staff of "chefs" to second his efforts, namely, John Young, Charles B. Weathered, Lawrence Hafner and W. W. Burnham.

The Bowling Club has had an eventful week, but no additions to its prospective membership. Last Monday Frank H. Traendley was presented with a baby girl. On Wednesday Alex. Burns added a daughter to his family (though he had to part with a son to do it), and Thursday Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Lang heard the voice of the stork and welcomed a girl baby to their home. Hafner and Thielman and Lentz have not reported, but three in one week is an excellent record for the club.

Among notable visitors last week were Superintendent of Parks Amrvhn, of New Haven, Conn., and S. S. Pennock and W. Atlee Burpee, of Philadelphia.

The regular monthly meeting of the New York Florists' Club will be held Monday evening, February 10. Reminiscences of the beefsteak dinner and reports of committees with reference to the fall exhibition will make it of special interest. Some exhibits of cut flowers and plants are expected, and some discussion as to the best route to the S. A. F. Asheville convention in August. It has been suggested that the Boston, Philadelphia and New York florists go by boat to Charleston, one of the steamship lines south guaranteeing that none but S. A. F. people will be accommodated and the whole boat be devoted to their comfort and entertainment. This would make a congenial, healthful, tour-days' holiday.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Roses are still very short in supply and prices are, if anything, a trifle stiffer than last week. We hear of sales of extra fancy Brides and Maids at as high as $15, though $6 to $12 is the range as a rule, with very good stock at $10. It seems to be less a question of price just now than favoring buyers who were good customers when stock was more plenty.

Of carnations there is an ample supply and the price on good stock ranges from $1.50 to $3, with poor colored ones going as low as $1, and some of the poorest of these not going at all. White has the call at present. Good dark violets are moving well at $1, but pale doubles and singles are little wanted.

Bulbous flowers are coming in very freely and prices are very low on all this class. An exception is the fine "Novelty" tulips Klehm is sending in to Kennicott's. These are good enough to take the place of roses in some work and they bring $5. Other bulbous stock seems to sell only when forced on a buyer by mere cheapness.

Local demand is not what it should be at the season, but shipping trade holds up well, New Orleans placing many orders now on account of Mardi Gras, and from the dealers' standpoint trade is all that could be expected.

The bitter cold weather of the week so far has no doubt hurt local demand. There have been a few frozen shipments, but more might have been expected with the thermometer so much of the time below the zero mark.

Various Items.

It is reported in the daily press that flowers will be a factor in the campaign for the election of officers of the Daughters of the American Revolution. One lady puts it thus: "When men are electioneering they give away cigars, beer, whisky and champagne. We can't well use any of these devices to humor the delegates. Now, why not use flowers?"

The wife of Henry Wittbold, eldest son of George Wittbold, died last week and was laid at rest Monday. Mr. Wittbold has the sympathy of his many friends in the trade in his bereavement.

Those desiring to attend the coming meeting of the American Carnation Society at Indianapolis should notify E. F. Winterson, 45 Wabash avenue, so they may be provided for in the special sleeper arranged for. The party will take the Panhandle train (Pennsylvania railroad), leaving Chicago at 8:40 p. m., February 18. This train reaches Indianapolis at 3:55 a. m., but those desiring may remain in the sleeper till 7 a. m. The Indianapolis florists will give a banquet to the visitors on Thursday evening, February 20.

The city council has passed an ordinance keeping fakirs off the streets. It wasn't necessary just now, as the bitter cold weather is most effectually keeping them off, and it remains to be seen whether the ordinance will be enforced when the weather withdraws its ban.

E. Asmus & Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500. The company will conduct a retail business in the new establishment recently erected by Mr. E. Buettner at the corner of Evanston and Kenmore avenues, on the north side.

John Sterrett, of McKellar & Winterson's, has been home since Thursday as the result of an attack of pneumonia. At last report he was improving.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market is brisk in these closing days of the social season. Prices have changed but little since the last quotations excepting those on violets; doubles have fallen to 60 cents to $1 a hundred and singles to 25 to 60 cents a hundred. Roses move well: the poorer grades are snapped up eagerly. The additions to the list are sprays of Acacia pubescens, myosotis and Narcissus poeticus, the two last named being specialties of Leo Niessen's. Tulips are coming in freely and sell well. Some fancy doubles were added to the list this week; the varieties are Salvata Rosa and Couronne d'Or, a decided novelty in this market; both are showy and rather expensive.

Notes.

Some very fine blooming plants are to be seen. Azaleas, Primula obconica, cyclamens, double daffodils in pans and cinerarias, the latter from Joseph P. Habermehl.

Exception has been taken to the statement made by the Floral Exchange in this column that the blooms of their new rose, Queen of Edgely, sold for the same price as American Beauty. It is urged that in justice to those who paid high prices for the stock of this rose the new variety should have brought more than the older one. The answer to this argument seems to be that Beauty having brought a higher price than any other rose ever offered, the Queen is doing well to equal this record.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons are earning a high reputation as decorators. At a dinner of twenty-three covers given to the judiciary last week a tank 6 feet by 3 feet was placed in the center of the table. In the center of this tank was a fountain surmounted by a statue of justice. Gold fish and turtles disported themselves in the water. Cork bark was used to represent paths leading to the pond and Liberty roses represented a rose garden on the snowy cloth, and all was beautifully illuminated by colored electric lights. This week the same firm used a quantity of orchids, lilacs and other choice flowers at a wedding breakfast at the Walton Hotel.

B. Stahl had a large decoration for the German-American ball on Monday evening. Mrs. Bertram Lippincott, John Kuhn's new carnation, is pr great success; although the plants were small in the fall, they are now producing quantities of large flowers borne on stems as thick as a lead pencil.

A Farmers' Institute meeting will be held at Horticultural Hall on Wednesday, February 19. There will be two sessions, first opening at 2 p. m., second at 8 p. m. The features will be papers on ornamental trees for suburban residences, by Joseph Meehan, and mushroom culture, by Joseph Kift, Jr. A question box will be another prominent feature.

Logan.

The large establishment of Hugh Graham is devoted to growing plants and flowers most needed at his retail store in the city. Mr. Graham is a decorator. His business requires large decorative plants, an abundance of showy flowering plants, handsome cut flowers with long stems and strings of green.

Areca lutescens is prized highly; it recovers more rapidly from rough usage than kentias, or in fact, any other palms. Caryota urens gives needed variety in foliage effects; though slow growing it is durable and much liked. The Boston fern is thought to take up too much room in winter, most of the stock being moved in the fall.

Among the flowering plants the choicest is Acacia pubescens. The stock here is probably unequaled in this country. The plants are five to six feet high, their graceful branches bright with flowers, intended to be at their best for the mid-winter and second assembly balls. Many azaleas are grown both for decorating and for selling, a few being flowered at all times throughout the season. Six thousand longiflorum lilies are forced, chiefly for Easter; some disease appeared, but all the stock now on the benches is in good shape. Forty thousand daffodils are forced. Orchids are well done. Three varieties of Cattleyas—labiata, Trianæ and Mossiæ—are depended upon to produce showy blooms.

In roses, two houses of Beauty, which did extremely well, have been replaced by Brunner. One house is in full crop now and will be over by Lent; the other is making nice breaks and should be in by Easter. It is thought this succession of crops is very satisfactory. Other roses are Edgely, Liberty, Sunrise, Bride and Maid; the first three in limited quantity.

It is in carnations that the foreman, Mr. Grosshens, particularly shines, and his houses are as fine as any about Philadelphia. The plants look well and they are working hard. White Cloud and Norway are grown for white; Joost, for deep pink; Victor, for light pink; Crane, for red. Then there are very fine Lawsons, Prosperity and many others. Next come a host of own seedlings that should make the happy owner feel as though "he were walking on air," as my friend Edward Swayne once graphically put it. They were of many shades and colors, all of merit. It is greatly to be regretted that Mr. Graham does not disseminate any of them. One, a pink of Daybreak shade, with large fragrant flower, borne on a long, stiff stem, would be an acquisition on any carnation place. Asparagus plumosus is grown to strings. PHIL.

CINCINNATI.

Market Conditions.

February is starting out with lots of snow and the thermometer about the zero mark. Those persons who are wont to cry, "We don't have winters like we used to have some fifteen or twenty years ago," are obliged to admit that this one is redeeming itself as far as snow and cold weather are concerned.

Notwithstanding the general scarceness of stock, the month of January proved to be very satisfactory from a business standpoint. All of the stores report a first-class trade; many of them an increase over last year. The wholesale trade showed an increase, and shipping trade was especially good.

Roses of all kinds are still very scarce, but not on account of "dark and cloudy weather." The shortage is due to the fact that they are off crop, and all the sunshine possible would not make them bloom any faster.

There is very little change in the prices obtained for roses from those quoted last week, and general conditions are the same. Perhaps this week will see a slight increase in the supply. At best it is to be hoped so, as this city could use many more good flowers.

Carnations are coming in fairly well and are selling first class. Especially is this true of the fancy grades. Some very good Enquirers bring 6 cents, which is top price. Fancies go for 3 to 4 cents and ordinary grades go slow at 1½ to 2 cents.

Narcissus are a little short and the price is well sustained. Valley, too, is going well; some extra stock brings 5 cents. All kinds of bulbous stock is profiting by the general shortage of other stock and is sold out fairly clean. Tulips and jonquils are to be seen in increasing numbers, but as yet the demand is not very great.

There is some very good smilax to be seen, and it is selling well at 12½ to 15 cents. Hardy eastern ferns are very good for this time of year; but from reports they are going to be very scarce this spring towards Easter.

Various Items.

There was quite a scare at the plant of George & Allan over a supposed case of smallpox. One of the employes was taken down with what was supposed to be smallpox and the place was quarantined by the health officers. As it proved to be only a severe case of measles you can easily believe that Messrs. George & Allan were immensely relieved.

Richard Witterstaetter was in Richmond, Ind., for a few days last week.

The little 5-year-old son of George Murphy is very sick with brain fever. At present he is slightly improving, and it is to be hoped the little fellow will have a perfect recovery.

Mrs. H. A. Kresken is greatly improved now. She is up and is able to walk about her room.

Miss White, of Lexington, Ky., was a caller, as also was Mr. Frank Snider, of Gallipolis, O. C. J. OHMER.

BROCKTON, MASS.

Business has been very satisfactory to the florists here this season.

Charles S. Cooper has one of the best equipped greenhouse plants in this section. He has six houses, each 20x150, heated by a 65-horse power boiler. The houses are under the management of Thomas Grieves, who deserves much credit for the fine condition of the stock. He has an exceptionally fine house of Crawfords and his sport, Copley. Another house worthy of special mention is one containing 2,000 Brunners for Easter trade. Mr. Cooper retails all the flowers produced in his own store in this city.

It is reported that H. E. Barrows has sold his business to his brother.

Henry S. Duly, of Randolph, reports a good trade. He is cutting some fine paper whites and has a house of lilies on the way for Easter.

Violets have been very poor in this section this season. It is thought to be due to the weather.

Quite a number of new greenhouses are to be built around here the coming summer, according to reports.

The Coming Convention.

For the benefit of those who may want to engage lodging at some hotel before starting for this city and the national convention we have secured the following list of rates:

Lorraine—American, 75 cents to $1.50; European, $1 to $2.50.

Spencer—American, $2. (This is just across the street from Union depot.)

Oneida—European, 50 cents to $1.

Circle Park—American, $1.50.

English—American, $2 to $2.50.

Denison—American, $2 to $5; European, $1 up.

Grand—American, $2.

The Grand Hotel has been selected as headquarters for the society and the banquet is to be given there also. The Denison is the nearest to the German House, where the exhibition and the meetings are to be held.

There will be members of our society at the depot to meet each incoming train, and visitors should not leave the depot until they meet one of the committee, who will see that they get to their hotel.

The various committees are working hard and the details are being worked out nicely. There are only a couple of weeks before us yet, but we do not fear that our boys will not be ready for the visitors by the 19th of this month, and we hope that it will be a record breaker in every way.

Notes.

Robert McKeand, who was for four years superintendent at Garfield Park, has leased the fixtures of Huntington & Page's cut flower department and a part of their large store room and has started out for himself. Robert was for three years secretary of the State Society of Indiana Florists, and is very popular among the florists and all wish him a good business in the future.

There will be a good deal of building this summer among the growers. Henry Rieman, Bertermann Bros., the Young-Smith Co., John Hartje and Baur & Smith all have taken advantage of the low prices on glass and will each add to their glass area. The largest addition will be Baur & Smith's 10,000 sq. ft., all in one large house. A. B.

Also a retail store, doing a fine business, located in one of the best buildings in the city. The city has a population of 50,000; the houses are 20 minutes' walk from heart of city, 100 yards from street car line and 50 miles from Pittsburg. The land is very rich as I have used thousands of loads of manure in the last five years, and is the best place for gardening in the state. Everything will stand the closest inspection. Good reasons for selling.

Price $20,000.

RICHMOND, VA.

Business has kept up well since the holidays and all in the trade seem to be well satisfied. Last week the demand for funeral work was remarkably steady all the week, everything in the way of a flower being used. Most of the fatalities were due to pneumonia, due to the changeable weather.

Frank Mossmiller, who added two new houses each 20x100, for roses two years ago, and another 17x100 for carnations last summer, is now getting material for another new one, 20x100, for chrysanthemums, and he expects to have same completed before summer arrives.

Dover, Del.—John Parsons, head florist of the Delaware division of the Pennsylvania Ry. Co., died recently. The floral offerings at the funeral were numerous and elaborate.

St. Valentine's day is coming and the demand for violets promises to be greater than ever for that occasion.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Another Big Exhibition.

Kansas City will endeavor next November to surpass her record of having given the biggest flower show ever held, and will give one bigger and better in every respect. At the last meeting of the Convention Hall Directors, the flower show question was taken up, and it was decided to hold the show the week of Nov. 3. Mr. F. J. Taggart was again unanimously elected Director General, and judging from his brilliant success last November, the success of next fall's exhibition is assured.

Mr. Taggart, when asked about the coming exhibition, said: "You can say to the readers of the REVIEW that the coming show will eclipse the one held last fall." As an indication of how things are going one firm who last fall gave $150, will this year give $350. Two other firms have decided to double their subscriptions. Mr. Taggart will himself offer $100 for the best lot of Mrs. F. J. Taggart chrysanthemums.

It has been announced that Mr. Taggart would soon make Omaha his home but he has recently decided to remain in Kansas City. This is certainly good news for the florists.

Notes.

Zero weather still prevails, but after having had so much bright weather, no one seems disposed to complain. Business is good but consists largely of funeral work. Roses are bringing $4 to $10 per hundred, with plenty of good stock in sight. Carnations, fancy, are in demand at $4, while any kind bring $2. There are plenty of fine tulips in the market, and good sale at from $3 to $4. Romans are a glut and only bring $1.50, with plenty going into the dump.

The bulb salesman has made his appearance and some heavy orders were placed with the growers here last week.

J. H. VESEY.

BUTTE, MONT.

Cut flower trade has been exceptionally brisk the past two weeks, with stock scarce. Funeral work has been in great demand, some of the stores working their forces all night.

There has also been quite a stir among Butte's 400 and numerous table decorations have been arranged. The decorations at two swell affairs were not carried out exactly as planned on account of the illness of O. A. C. Oehmler, of the Butte Floral Co. He is now able to be about again.

Carnations are in great demand. Beauties scarce, bulb stuff plenty.

We have had some very cold weather, the lower part of town experiencing 45 degrees below zero, and the mercury has been below zero for the past week, with snow, and everything is on runners.

Rambler.

KALAMZOO, MICH.

With the exception of the first week of January trade has been very steady. Brides, Maids and Meteors are at present nearly off crop, the supply not keeping pace with the demand. Beauties are here in quantity and are of excellent quality. The demand for them is steady, prices ranging from $1.50 per dozen up retail. Never saw them so cheap.

Carnations also are a little off crop, but the cut is still ample to supply the demand. The quality is very superior. Violets are a big crop. The demand for Imperial and Marie Louise is steady. Campbells and single varieties are scarcely looked at.

Bulbous stock is also here in quantity. The grade as yet is not of the best, but sales are quickly effected. Lilies are beginning to come in quantity. The quality is good; disease is almost absent. The stock for Easter flowering is looking particularly fine.

Rhees.

WASHINGTON.

The American Rose Company supplied their Ivory rose in large quantity for the lavish white rose decorations at the wedding of Miss Helen Hay, daughter of the secretary of state, to Mr. Payne Whitney, Thursday, February 6. It was quite a coincidence that Henry Clews, Jr., one of the ushers, is the son of Mrs. Henry Clews, of New York, who subscribed the $50 prize to the American Rose Society for the best 50 white roses and which was won by the American Rose Company with their Ivory at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, last March.

Hastings, Neb.—Mr. I. W. Cramer died January 17, 60 years of age. He came to Hastings, Neb., in 1883 to embark in the floral business and started with one greenhouse 25x75 feet. His business grew, everybody liked him and he soon became leading florist. In 1885 he added shrubbery, fruit and shade trees to his already large business. He was a member of the school board and also councilman for many years. Being of a jovial disposition, he was well liked by all. At the funeral there were many flowers, sprays and floral designs, among them a large and most beautiful gates ajar by Chas. Winkler, florist.

THE Review's classified advs. are a great convenience, is the verdict of the buyers. "It is so easy to find what you want."

MONTREAL.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the Montreal Gardeners' and Florists' Club took place Jan. 27 in the rooms of the Natural History Society. The report of the year's work showed the standing of the club to be O K. It was decided to secure more suitable quarters for the club meetings and after the 1st of May our headquarters will be in the York Chambers, corner St. Catherine and Drummond streets.

The officers elected for the present year are: President, George Trussell; first vice president, R. W. Whiting; second vice president, T. Martel; secretary-treasurer, W. H. Horobin, 130 Tupper street; assistant secretary, William C. Hall; executive committee: J. Kirkwood, Geo. Copeland, J. Pidduck, W. Alcock, W. G. Pascoe and J. Lucke.

At the conclusion of business an adjournment was made to the large hall, where the annual dinner was celebrated. Those present flatter themselves that they never spent a better time. The musical selections of Mr. Burke and the Quivron orchestra were much enjoyed, and the words of eloquence from the lips of Joseph Bennett should never be forgotten.

MANCHESTER, N. H.

All the florists here are doing a satisfactory business. The holiday trade was way ahead of that of previous years. Dr. Campbell has had some of the finest carnations ever seen here.

Ingram's store always looks well. He believes in display and keeps his palms and ferns in fine shape.

James Herly has opened a store in the city and is doing well. His carnations are producing very fine blooms.

Andrew Hood has opened a store with a fine window and makes a good display. He is continually improving his greenhouses, which are two miles out of town.

The new place in the north end, owned by Mr. Bigsby, is looking well. The houses are 20x300 and very high. His carnations are a credit to him.

Another new place is that owned by Walter M. Parke, consisting of five houses. One is devoted to palms and the others to roses, carnations and bedding stock. All the plants are doing well under the management of Mr. Rinn, the gardener.

A. F. L.

Palmer Lake, Colo.—Mrs. K. B. Sherwin built a small greenhouse last fall and intends to enlarge her place next fall. This place is only a summer resort and the population is small except in summer. Mr. Eben Smith has a nice private place here and P. J. Miller is gardener.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Lambert Floral Company has sold the name "Lambert" to Lambert Bros. and have applied for a charter changing the name to Atlanta Floral Company.

The MRS. E. A. NELSON

Bids fair to become the commercial standard pink carnation. It is a healthy grower, a free and continuous bloomer, and it is sure to thrive wherever grown.

The following letter from Messrs. Robert Craig & Son, speaks for itself.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 6th, 1902.

S. S. SKIDELSKY. It has good long stiff stems. We think that it will be a standard variety. Yours truly,

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

[The following notes were written for last week's issue but arrived too late owing to delay in the mails. Readers will please make allowance for one week's time having elapsed.]

Easter.

Easter is but six weeks next Sunday. It will soon be here and the timing of our crops for that date will give us mental and physical exercise from now on.

Azaleas.

Azaleas, if not the most important, are certainly second only to the lilies as an Easter plant. There should be no failure in getting those in as desired. If we get much snowy and cloudy weather such varieties as Mme. Van der Cruyssen, Empress of India and other good ones will be just about right in a house where now it is kept at about 45 degrees at night. But later varieties, like Emperor de Brazil, will want 10 degrees higher, and perhaps more, if you wish to bring them in.

There is some demand, of course, for a nice azalea plant after Easter, but really we get so much more for them if in the right condition at Easter that it would be most satisfactory to sell out every plant. Keep the growth rubbed off which starts from base of flower buds and till they show color syringe them on every fine morning.

I think I mentioned once that the finest plants we had last year were some Bernhard Andreas, the splendid deep pink. They had been carried over in pots the previous summer and made grand plants, a ball of flowers. This grand variety does not import well, or, rather, seldom flowers sufficiently well to be sold the following spring, so if yours are in that condition pinch out the flowers and reserve them to be grown on.

Azalea Mollis can now be potted up from cold-frame or root-house. When Easter is early this is a most useful plant, for the flowers then hold, but when flowered end of April and weather should be hot they drop their flowers very quickly. Two weeks in a cool house will do, and syringe them daily till color shows.

Deutzias.

Deutzia gracilis is a cheap plant, but we think it pays. Even if you don't sell all the plants it is most useful for cutting. They need about seven weeks in a temperature of 55 degrees to open up nicely. You can easily give them a little more if necessary.

Rhododendrons.

Rhododendrons should be brought into a good heat at once; 55 degrees will do for a few weeks, but they may need more; that you must see for yourself. The Rhododendron delights in plenty of moisture when being forced. Some years ago importers brought over fine varieties of Rhododendrons just because they had splendid flowers, but many of these beautiful varieties were almost useless for forcing. Now the florists have told them what varieties they want and there is not the same disappointment.

Cytisus and Acacia.

I said something a few weeks ago about cytisus and acacia. They are always in time; if not, a house about 50 degrees will be sure to bring them right. Keep water away from the little globular flowers of Acacia armata after they begin to show color.

Hydrangeas.

Hydrangeas should now be all showing their flower heads and require a good, high temperature to be fully out at the right date. These are often forced at a very high temperature and suffer accordingly when sold and delivered at Easter. If we could get them in good bloom a week ahead of time and give them the spare days in a cool house they would be much more satisfactory to the purchaser.

These hydrangeas always fill the pots with roots. They are gross feeders, both for manure and water. In fact, the genus derives its name from Hydra (water). This interesting information was not discovered by me, but by one of the classically learnt florists of Philadelphia, George Watson, I think, who is such a judge of water and——. But, as I was saying, they are thirsty creatures and if the water runs away as it should you can scarcely over water them. Now you can begin to give them liquid manure, at first not too strong, but increase the strength till flowers are open, then quit. If liquid manure is not handy to you a slight amount of sheep manure on the surface of soil, every two weeks, will help them.

Crimson Ramblers.

Crimson Rambler rose is now a most important plant. I saw a lot at Jamestown a few days ago, lifted from their own ground and put into 6-inch pots. They were most excellent little bushes and feathered with breaks to the pot. Ours are plants carried over last summer. Both ways are all right if well done.

The Ramblers should be now showing the truss distinctly. They have a finer color and are better plants all around if they can be flowered in a night temperature of 55 degrees. Syringe frequently but look out for mildew. I am sorry to say this beautiful rose is often attacked by this scourge. A draught is most often the cause of mildew with our tea roses, but with these pot roses there may be other reasons for its appearance. Excessive dryness is dangerous and if it went the length of wilting the leaves you would be nearly sure to have mildew. Or excessive heat, or a drop of 10 degrees below what they have been kept steadily at during nights. Of course you would not allow any such neglect as that, but you know careless fellows that have, and then they call it bad luck.

Lilies.

Lilies give us the most concern to get them in just right. Fortunately the Japan bulbs arrived in good time last fall, so that they were well rooted before we began to grow them inside. From what I have observed they will generally be on time. Those that have full control of heat and can keep up 70 degrees at night have nothing to fear even if the lilies are a week or so behind. But we don't all have unlimited steam power.

The lilies should all be now showing their buds distinctly, and if the first buds are an inch long, so much the better. Be careful not to take out any of them into a cooler house unless you are sure they are much too early, either the Japans or Harrisii. They will almost stand still if given a night temperature of 10 degrees lower. Better let them come on till the buds are just ready to open their petals, then they will endure the cool house and open. Remember, you can keep a lily easily two weeks and more in a cool, shaded house from the time the first bud expands, but you are much more likely to be watching their increasing size than trembling about retarding them.

No excuse for aphis after buds are once in sight. A mild smoking twice a week will keep them perfectly clean. Tobacco dust will do, but there is nothing like smoke for aphis; it gets everywhere. The trouble is that fumigating is a disagreeable job and it is often shirked. It should be done as regularly and time given for it just as much as watering, which we never dream of neglecting. If you can vaporize by steam, perhaps you don't need to smoke.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

Those who want to have a house of Kaiserins in bloom early in summer should proceed with their planting at once. This rose revels in a rich loamy soil with plenty of sod in it. The proportion of well decomposed cow manure should be one load to four of soil, the whole to be well chopped up and thoroughly incorporated. If the soil should be in a wet and sodden condition (as often happens at this season) it should be allowed to lie on the benches a day or two to dry; turning it over once or twice, in a temperature of 70 degrees, will bring it to a mellow condition.

As this rose when in a growing condition requires copious supplies of water it is well to give the bench plenty of drainage. The boards for the bottom of the bench should not be wider than six inches and placed one inch apart. Spread some litter over the spaces to keep the soil from running until the soil gets firmed. The depth of the soil in a loose condition should be five inches. When the soil is firmed down and after many applications of water this will be reduced to three and one-half inches, which will leave ample room for mulching. A sprinkling of desiccated bone meal will be of benefit in helping to start growth; twenty pounds to a bench 100x4½ feet is quite sufficient for the immediate use of newly planted stock. There is no necessity for stirring it into the soil as sufficient will fall around the ball to supply the immediate wants; the after-cultivation of the soil and watering will take the remainder deep enough for the fresh roots to find it.

The balls should be disturbed as little as possible, merely rubbing off a little of the surface. Plant just deep enough to cover the ball, firming the soil equally well all around it. For the first ten days the plants ought to be watered individually close around the ball. To guard against the attacks of red spider they ought to be syringed freely every bright day. The surface should be cultivated to a depth of an inch regularly once a week.

Stock coming out of a temperature of 56 degrees should not be subjected to much of a change until root action is well established. As this rose succeeds best at a temperature of 62 degrees, the rise should be gradual until this is reached, allowing it to run up to 75 degrees on bright days. Give plenty of ventilation on all favorable occasions. Disbud, stake and tie up as soon as necessary and they will begin to show some fine buds by the middle of May.

Ribes.

BENCHES.

We would like to have a general expression of opinion on the much mooted question as to whether or not there is any advantage in raised or "step" benches over those on a level, in an equal span or three-quarter span facing south. Anchorage Rose Co.

Table benches about 33 inches in height and all on the same level are most suitable for even span houses with a south aspect. In three-quarter span houses where the north and south walls are of the same height the same style of bench is also best.

There is some advantage to be gained in a three-quarter span house where the north wall is higher than the south one, by having the south bench the lowest, and each bench towards the north raised from 8 to 10 inches higher than the one to the south of it. The plants will thus have less chance of being shaded during the short days when the sun is low. This of course can only apply to detached houses or to those situated on a slope. None of the benches should be sloped. Ribes.

CARNATIONS.

Cultural Notes.

By this time some of those earliest potted cuttings may need topping, and you should not neglect it until they begin to bloom. There is no need of letting a lot of growth go to waste and the plant to waste its strength in producing a lot of stem and perhaps a bud that you will later on cut off and throw away. Growers do not all agree as to the proper time to top the young plant, and so you must in a measure use your own judgment after weighing the various opinions of others. Some growers prefer to pull out the heart when the plant is quite small, while others like to let the plant almost show the bud, while still others, ourselves included, prefer to catch them just between these two points. When we see the joints lengthening out so that we can see the stem between the joints, then is when we take off the top, not by cutting with a knife, but by snapping it at a joint. You should leave several joints above the ground, so there will be enough eyes to break from without making the shoots start too close to the soil, which will in a wet season cause the grass to rot and often bring on stemrot.

There is a great difference in varieties, too, and each should be pinched according to its habit. For instance, Mrs. Bradt, White Cloud and such growth should be pinched tolerably low, and every time a shoot makes two or three joints it should be pinched again until a compact bush is formed. But such varieties as Flora Hill, Mrs. Joost, E. Crocker, etc., really need only to be topped once and it should be tolerably high up, as each eye will break and a compact plant is their natural form; and with the exception of keeping them from running into bud later in the summer in the field there will be no more topping needed.

Do not do what some growers practice when they have a few plants of something fine or new. It is this: They buy a few plants of a new variety and when it comes they pot up the young cuttings and set them in a warm house, where they will grow rapidly, and as soon as they can they pull out the top and stick it in the cutting bench, expecting thereby to double their stock. They may be doubling the number of their plants, but they are also diminishing the bloom and quality producing power of their stock.

When you get your stock of the novelties, pot them up and set in a cool house, where they will make a sturdy, stocky growth, and when the time comes for pinching them, do it right and don't rob the plant of an extra joint in order to make another cutting. Many of the novelties are propagated pretty hard to begin with (although it is not so bad as it was a few years ago) and it often takes a whole season to get the stock into good condition again, and so you should do all you can to promote a sound sturdy growth.

Benching Carnation Plants.

Please request Mr. Baur to state in the Review whether he finds carnations doing better planted in the benches with soil on the roots or without it? In the essay by Mr. Geo. S. Osborn he seems to favor removing the soil from the roots before planting in the bench. M. H.

Judging from Mr. Osborn's words, one is led to believe he shakes all the soil from the roots when he houses his carnation plants, and as this is a question on which many good growers disagree it is quite possible that he does so. I know of many good growers who shake all the soil from the roots and dip the roots into a pail of water as soon as they are dug and they have the very best of success. I think it takes a little closer watching for a few days when the soil is all shaken off than when a ball about the size of a 3-inch pot is left on the roots. When a ball of earth of considerable size is left the roots are not all disturbed and the plant can draw moisture, etc., from those undisturbed roots until it gets a good hold of the new soil, and the suffering is much less in extreme hot weather.

Several years ago we planted altogether with as large a ball of earth as possible, but through some other neglect always lost a certain percentage, but when some of the foremost growers began to recommend shaking off all the soil it naturally became necessary to watch them very closely for a few weeks in order not to lose the whole batch.

We have, however, since gone back to the old way of saving a ball of earth to each plant and at the same time giving them just as close attention as when we shook it all off. The result is that we lose fewer plants than ever, and I believe they start off a little quicker, all of which counts heavily when a high grade of bloom is wanted early in the season.

In some soils this is almost impossible, though, unless you pot the young plants into 3-inch pots before planting in the field, and it pays to do it, not only to hold on the soil, but you will also get a good sized plant earlier. Then there is that heavy, stiff soil which would not allow any shaking off at all without tearing off most of the roots, which should not be used for growing carnation plants if it can be avoided. We do not discard a good plant though merely because the soil may have dropped away from the roots, but it is planted along with the rest and given some water as it is planted so that the roots do not get too dry from coming in contact with the warm soil in the bench.

We think that every grower should decide this question for himself after studying his soil and conditions in general, but for the beginner it is undoubtedly the safest plan to save some soil on the roots if at all possible.

Irrigating Carnations in the Field.

Is it advisable to irrigate a piece of land 100x200 for carnation plants, the land sloping about two feet the long way? If so, what kind of tiles should be used, how deep, how far apart, and how should the connections with the waterworks be made? Please give particulars through the Review. C. W.

I have no doubt that great benefits could be derived from a piece of land that is well irrigated, especially during an extremely dry season such as we had last year, when everything suffered badly for want of rain. There certainly would be little danger of having a lot of undersized plants to house in the fall.

And yet I would not be willing to say that it would pay one who has to pay for the water at the rate usually charged in cities, except during such extremely dry seasons as last summer. During any ordinary season with a normal rainfall we have never had any trouble in getting fine plants by August 1, and even last summer the plants from 3-inch pots were of good size by that time.

I have often noticed that during moderately dry summers we lose fewer plants in housing our carnations than we do during wet summers, which is no doubt caused by the plants being harder on account of having grown slower. So I believe that with good plants to start with, planted out early, plenty of hoeing or cultivating and a fair amount of rain, we can get along nicely without any irrigation and have better plants at housing time, although perhaps not quite so large. There would also be this disadvantage. He could not very well practice crop rotation unless he would irrigate a piece of ground about three or four times as large as his carnations would occupy.

I am unable to give him any information in regard to how it should be arranged, etc., as I have had no experience in that line. There are no doubt other subscribers to the REVIEW who can and are willing to give the desired information. A. F. J. BAUR.

THE GOODENOUGH CARNATION.

The flowers are pure white, from 2¾ to 3 inches in diameter, borne on straight, strong, wiry stems, 20 to 24 inches long. The calyx is perfect. It begins to bloom early and never lets up until thrown out in the fall.

Parentage: Goodenough is a seedling of 1897 from a white seedling with McGowan, the white seedling from Portia and McGowan. It is by far the most prolific carnation I have ever grown, giving from 20 to 50 per cent more No. 1 blooms (singles not counted) to the square foot than anything I have ever grown. Goodenough is very healthy, not being subject to rust, and when well grown the grass has that bluish cast which is so desirable. It does best when grown in a night temperature of from 52 to 54 degrees and kept a little on the dry side.

Its faults: The first crop of bloom will have some single flowers, but if well grown only a small per cent, and they are all right from before Thanksgiving till the next July.

Other varieties: I have watched with some interest the discussion going on in the paper regarding the commercial value of Joost as compared with Ethel Crocker. I think that with us Joost is by all odds the most profitable. Crocker with me has lots of crooked stems, bursts some flowers, and does not bloom in mid-winter. Joost blooms all the time, has a strong, straight stem and, though not so large as Crocker, is a good sized flower. With me Joost is the best of its color. I shall discard Scott, Crocker and Triumph next season.

White Cloud with me blooms well in midwinter, but is late in beginning and stops early. I do not consider it profitable unless one can get $5 or $6 per hundred for the blooms. I have grown Daybreak for light pink with profit, but think I shall try something else as it gives too many imperfect flowers now. I am growing Gen. Maceo for a dark one and find it a great bloomer and profitable, although the flower is rather small.

In scarlet I have only a few plants of Crane and, while it is a good color, I do not think I get as large blooms from it as I used to from Jubilee. I want to see one that will give more bloom and at least as large a flower as Jubilee. I put Mrs. T. W. Lawson in a class by itself. With me it is very free and fine in flower, calyx and stem. Mrs. Geo. M. Bradt is the best I have seen in variegated. It has a fine large flower and is a continuous bloomer but with me it grows but slowly out of doors, so that the plants are small when they come to the house.

LILY TROUBLES.

B. F. K. asks "Will Lilium Harrisii now about 10 to 12 inches high be in bloom for Easter with a night temperature of 70 degrees and a day temperature of 90 degrees?"

From this date (Feb. 11) there is about 47 days. They should be more forward to feel comfortable about them. The weather will be a factor. If March should be a clear, sunny month I would say that at the temperature quoted they can be got in by Easter. While giving this high temperature give them the very lightest position you have.

I do not like the height mentioned. If they are only 10 inches high because they were started late there is every hope for them, but if started in good time and stunted they are not in a promising condition.

From J. R. E. comes a more complicated question. He writes: "What can be the trouble with my longiflorum and Harrisii? Both are affected alike. The roots are abundant, but are rotting off at the ends. They first turn brown and when examined under the microscope small soft looking insects can be seen on the very ends of the roots. The roots turn brown and rot at that point. Can it be that the soil is too rich? What should the soil contain when bulbs are first planted? And give the order of mulching afterward. Temperature has been from 50 to 60 degrees. The plants are showing bud and are only 8 to 12 inches high. I have grown lilies for 10 years but never before saw them act like this."

I do not believe that the insects discovered are the cause of the failure or the disease. They are more likely some minute creatures that have come from the manure. The roots of lilies often decay and although it may partially affect the health of the plant it does not necessarily ruin it.

The temperature quoted is the most suitable for health and vigor providing it is enough to bring them in on time.

The fact is there is a deplorable lot of disease among both Bermudas and the Japans and I believe it is worse with the latter, and there is little doubt that the trouble is not with the cultivation of J. R. E., but he has got hold of a bad lot of bulbs.

The soil for lilies should never contain much animal manure and that should never be very fresh. A good fresh heavy yellow loam is the best.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

ASPARAGUS PLUMOSUS SEED.

I have had some experience with Asparagus plumosus seeds that may be of interest to some of my brother florists. I am satisfied that for the want of knowledge on the subject a great deal of this seed has been thrown away as worthless, and the party who sold the seed was blamed for selling inert seed, when really the seed was fresh and fertile, only for some unknown reason slow in germinating. During the last three or four years I have grown and sold many thousand Asparagus plumosus seeds and have raised many thousands of plants from seeds grown by me.

What urges me to write this article is the varied experiences I have had as to the germination of the seeds. In January, 1899, I soaked in hot water and sowed about 12,000 seeds, from which I got in due time about 10,000 plants, and then threw out the seed boxes, thinking that the other 2,000 seeds were no good. I am satisfied if I had retained the seed boxes, the other

2,000 seeds, or at least the most of them, would eventually have come up.

In February, 1900, I sowed about 8,000 seeds and at the time I expected them to come up only a few seedlings showed up, and then more came up at different times during the year, and not until the following February, 1901, did the bulk of the seeds come up, having been in the soil about a year. Temperature in the house winter and summer from 60 to 90 degrees. And in February, 1901, I again sowed a lot of seeds immediately after picking them from the vines, and have been taking plants out of these seed boxes ever since till now, February 8, 1902, we took out the last, and threw out the seed boxes, having sowed the seeds about a year ago.

In justice to myself and others who have sold Asparagus plumosus seed, and many have been accused of selling poor seed, I make the above statement. My advice is, if your seed does not come up good in due time, let your boxes stand, keeping them watered, and it will pay you.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions for Feb. 3-8.

Things could have been more exciting. The traffic is limited and is carried on with a limited supply of limited varieties. Roses, pinks, violets, lilies, bulb goods, valley, mignonette, small white flowers and green material are the only topics worth expanding; there are other blossoms that come in, but too irregular to be worth considering. Among these are orchids, sweet peas, marguerites, candytuft, stevia, stocks, ageratums, azaleas and Narcissus poeticus.

Roses.—Good red roses are very scarce and prices are ranging higher. I handle a few fine ones and my conscience is abnormal enough to rap you $1 a piece for three-footers, 50 cents each for two-footers, an $1 a dozen for good heads with almost no stem at all. Two dollars per dozen is the best price I have known to be received for Meteors or Liberties lately, both kinds being rather small, the latter especially so. Good grades of ordinary roses are fairly plentiful and sell well at from $1 to $3 per dozen. Smaller ones are very scarce and hard to obtain at any price. Buyers, however, will use something else before paying heavy prices for roses to use for funeral purposes. Perles, Morgans, Helen Gould, Sunset, Bon Silene and Golden Gate are barely represented.

Pinks.—There are a few tremendously good pinks coming in and are selling at 5 and 6 cents. Then there is a fairly good supply at 2 to 4 cents, and others at less figures. None of these grades are particularly overplentiful and practically all sell out.

Violets.—These are fluctuating a bit—one day very plentiful, another almost scarce. Quality ranges from very poor to very good. Have seen prices run from 30 cents to $1 per 100.

Lilies.—Good; plenty; $1.50.

Bulb Goods.—Good enough; plenty enough, and cheap enough generally. White tulips selling well because of scarcity in small roses.

Valley.—Good and cheap.

Mignonette.—Good quality scarce. Fairly plenty in cheap grades, from 25 to 50 cents per dozen.

Small white flowers scarce, except bulbs and pips. Green material cheap and good.

Pip Goods.

Thereby hangs a tale! As I hear it, it goes like this: For years Carl Jurgens of Rhode Island has almost wholly supplied this market, by way of two of our worthy wholesalers, his chief competitor being A. N. Pierson, of Connecticut, through another popular Hawley street house. When the Wood Rose Company established their cold storage plant they also installed in connection therewith first-class facilities for raising valley that would overtop the surrounding hills. This might have been a joke simply on certain denizens of certain New England states not legislated for under the gilded dome at the head of Park street, except for the fact that E. N. Peirce & Sons took a notion to take a hack at the business, and everybody knows how they do business. John McFarland also put on a kettle full to boil. The result is that valley blooms and valley talk is cheap and the more of it you can use the cheaper it comes.

Notes.

Have you advised your neighbor to get those brown-tail moth nests off his trees? Have you ever gathered them from your own? If the crop now upon pear trees is not garnered it is safe to guess no other one will be produced.

J. H. Pond, of Foxboro, has been quietly working up a stock of his new white carnation, Lillian Pond, extra fine blooms of which are being shipped to this market. He intended to put the plants upon the market this winter, but has sold the whole stock to S. J. Reuter, of Westerly, R. I., who will not utter them for another year. Reuter isn't buying up anything like that unless it is all right. J. S. Manter.

NEW YORK.

The past week has been a busy one with many of the retailers, the receptions, balls and dinners being more numerous and important than any week of the year to date. Prices with the wholesalers have averaged about the same as last week's quotations. With the beginning of Lent, Wednesday, the midwinter dullness is anticipated. The coming of Prince Henry will call, however, for elaborate floral demonstrations and the Metropolitan Opera House on February 25 will be a "bower of beauty." The greatest opera programme ever presented in this country will be given. The cost of the decorations alone will be over $10,000. If this sycophantic oblation to royalty will only add to the coffers of the legitimate florists of the city and help to increase the general demand for flowers we will try to bear it.

The beefsteak dinner Saturday evening was a "hummer." Julius Lang and his corps of assistants "made good," and also made good steak, and plenty of it. Everybody was satisfied. All the notables were there, from all parts of the big city, several from out of town societies, and one, Fred Breitmeyer, all the way from Detroit, as usual the happiest of the crowd.

The celery and old musty ale were of a rare vintage, and the dessert of chops was as toothsome as a Chicago lamb could make it.

Interspersed with all this sacrifice to the goddess of gastric juice were contributions by some of the best male vaudeville talent in the city, and music and song and magic rounded out a most enjoyable night.

The services closed before the prohibitive hour of 12, and the second beefsteak dinner of the club was voted better than its predecessor and more than was expected. I wonder every Florist Club in this country does not add this festival to its winter programme.

Robert Grey, of North Easton, Mass.; J. H. Relstock, of Buffalo, and Fred Breitmeyer, of Detroit, were among the out of town visitors to the metropolis during the past week.

Mr. Albert Wadley hopes to return to his home in New Rochelle within a week. His recovery has been slow and painful. It will be a long time before he can hope to resume his active business responsibilities.

Mr. Charles See, bookkeeper for Siebrecht & Son, has been a month convalescing, and instead of a "shaking up" as he supposed, has been nursing two broken ribs and an injured spine. He expects to resume his duties this week.

Mr. Joosten, nephew of C. H. Joosten, the importer, mourns the loss of his first baby.

A. H. Langjahr, the wholesale florist, has again received the honor of appointment as state vice-president of the S. A. F. O. H.

The American Rose Society has offered some fine special prizes for the New York rose show, March 10, 11 and 12, and a great display is anticipated. The rose convention will be held in the Berkeley Lyceum Theater, and Dr. Halsted, Samuel Parsons, Dr. Van Vleet, Cornelius Van Brunt, James Wood and Dr. Huey will address the societies. The S. A. F. O. H. offers two medals to be awarded to the best two new roses of American origin. H. A. Siebrecht presents the Siebrecht challenge cup, valued at $150, for the best display of H. P. roses in bloom grown in such pots, 25 varieties; $25 by Mrs. Thomas Newbold, for best 50 blooms of Liberty; $25 by American Rose Company for 25 best blooms of Golden Gate; the ex. com. prize of $100 silver cup, best 50 square feet display of roses in pots; $100 in cash by Mrs. Stoecker in three prizes; and the president's prize of $25 for best three vases Bride, Maid and any other variety, not American Beauty.

ley and was ordered by the Sons and Daughters of St. George, the price being $100.

The panel was 8 by 7 feet, the outer edge of polished ivy leaves, and the portrait encircled by a wreath of bay leaves draped with the American and British flags. The lettering reads, "Sympathy, Sons and Daughters of St. George." The flowers used can be identified in the picture.

The design certainly reflects much credit upon Mr. Stevenson.

CINCINNATI.

Various Items.

The chief topic of conversation among the florists is the rapidly approaching carnation meeting. Cincinnati is going to be well represented at Indianapolis this year both in number of florists attending and in the quality of flowers that will be staged by them. Most of the boys are going via the C. H. & D. Trains leave here at 3:20 a. m. and 8:30 a. m. On the certificate plan the rate will be $4.40 for the round trip. Side trips to New Castle, Lafayette and Richmond will be made from Indianapolis. In this manner they will be able to save considerable in railroad fare.

The condition of the market is about as last reported. Roses are still just as scarce and no prospects for a relief for some time to come. Extra good stock brings 12½ to 15 cents each. Carnations are in fairly good supply, but the demand is great and they are rapidly cleaned up. A few days last week there was somewhat of a drag to be noticed in the market and prices dropped a few points, but by Saturday the demand was up to normal and prices had recovered. The second grade carnations were the worst sufferers, some of them in such varieties as Scott, Portia, etc., being sold out at 50 cents per 100. A few met even a worse fate, and were consigned to the dump.

Violets are selling nicely but no fancy prices are to be obtained for them; $1 per 100 for the best is the highest and the majority go at 50 cents. Some of the best coming to this market are from E. T. Grave, Richmond, Ind. The color of their Marie Louise and Princess of Wales is hard to beat.

Owing to large orders, bulbous stock was rather scarce for a few days. But new stock is rapidly coming in and there is about enough to go around. Harrisiis are more plentiful but callas are still rather scarce. Tulips and daffodils are about equal to demand.

A few sweet peas are coming in, variety is Blanche Ferry. The stems are rather short but they sell fast as a novelty.

I saw several houses of Harrisii lately that will just about get in in time to miss Easter. This is too bad as there is always a surplus of this flower for some time following Easter and consequently the price is down pretty low. Easter coming so early this year (March 30) perhaps caught some of the growers unawares.

Lent begins on the 12th, but I do not believe that it will affect the state of the market to any great extent. Stock is so short that a trifle less demand will not be noticed. In fact for the last couple of years Lent could scarcely be noticed, the demand being just about the same.

At E. G. Gillett's wholesale house I noticed a large vase of Richard Witterstaetter's carnation "Enquirer." They made a fine show and for color I have not seen their equal. They sell well at from 4 to 6 cents. The E. G. Hill Co. of Richmond, Ind., are sending in some of the finest Brides and Maids I ever saw. It is needless to say that they meet a ready sale.

Our spell of extremely cold weather is still with us and consequently coal piles are looking sick. C. J. OHMER.

ORANGE, N. J.

The New Jersey Floricultural Society enjoyed its seventh annual dinner at the Elks' Hall, Orange, last Wednesday evening. The attendance was large and many friends from a distance were present. The tables were handsomely decorated. Lager & Hurrell contributed vases of finest Cattleyas; John N. May, his new rose, Mrs. Oliver Ames; Edward Thomas, a vase of seedling carnations, crimson; and Secretary Smith, some grand cyclamen plants and a fine assortment of roses and carnations. The officers of the society are John Hayes, president; Joseph Manda, vice-president; George Smith, secretary; Malcolm Macrorie, treasurer, nearly all re-elected. Mr. Manda presided at the business session preceding the banquet, and the report of the secretary showed a membership of 80, and a good surplus in the treasury.

Mr. Hayes relegated the honors of toastmaster to Mr. John N. May, who performed the duties in his usual manner, making everybody very much at home, and adding constantly to the merriment of the evening.

The first toast, the "New York State Horticultural Society," was responded to by Dr. Ward, whose address was largely historical and commendatory, dwelling upon the excellent work of Professors Smith and Halsted, and the exhibit records of the state at the great exposition.

The toast, "The Society of American Florists," had as its exponent the secretary, Mr. W. J. Stewart, who read a very interesting address on the accomplishments of the society during the past 19 years and its wonderful growth and influence.

"Our Sister Societies" was ably spoken to by Mr. Charles Totty, of the Morris County Horticultural Society; "Florists Past and Present" found an able advocate in Mr. Henry Bird, of Newark, N. J., whose reminiscences of 40 years, and interesting details of the evolution of the florist business in this country, were listened to with much appreciation. His quotations from James Russell Lowell, his memories of Peter Henderson and his song, later in the evening, were all worthy of the occasion.

Mr. Butterfield, of the Exchange, was in good voice, and his singing was heartily applauded.

The toast of "The Seedsman" called forth the witty response of the evening from Mr. O'Mara, who was "in rare good humor" and kept his audience hilarious throughout. His recommendations of and objections to the sunflower and the potato blossom as "the national flower" were especially amusing. "Our Pastimes" were talked about by Mr. Shaw. The toast to "Orchid Culture" found an able and practical enthusiast in Dr. Kitchen, whose elaborate address was only in its infancy when the New York contingent was obliged to catch the midnight train.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The supply of roses has increased somewhat and on Tuesday there was a weakness in the prices of roses as well as other stock. Ten dollars a hundred was the highest price for extra select stock and the chances are that this rate will be reduced to $8 by the time this is in print. Good stock was already selling at $6 to $8 with inferior as low as $4. In carnations there is demand enough to use up the fanciest at $2 to $3, with good ordinaries at $1 to $1.50, and materially lower prices are made on lots in quantity.

White flowers have much the best call now and it seems almost impossible to move low grade colored carnations at any price. Bulbous stuff is still over plentiful and unpleasantly low prices have to be made if at all, an exception being Klehm's tulips which are very fine and which bring very satisfactory prices.

The increasing supply and the advent of Lent this week will, it is feared, result in a surplus of stock that will be difficult to handle and the outlook is certainly for lower prices than have been prevailing, and particularly on roses. But Lent is not feared as much as it used to be and with the prices that have been obtained so far the average for the season will no doubt prove satisfactory.

Various Items.

Kennicott Bros. Co. have renewed their lease for five years at their present location and have also taken in an adjoining basement which will add about one-third more room. They will also make extensive changes and improvements. Their present storage room will be entirely lined with hollow tiles and large new ice boxes will be added also.

E. C. Amling had about 20 inches of water in his place of business for a few hours as the result of a fire in an adjoining building. Fortunately there was sufficient warning to enable them to pile most of their goods on the counters. The water penetrated the ice box and came within a few inches of the tops of the jars. The principal loss was in the local trade that was barred for some hours on account of the flood.

The water reached over into Kennicott Bros. Co.'s place and did some little damage to their stock of paper and wire work, fully covered by insurance. The greatest inconvenience at both places resulted from an order by the fire marshal to vacate both places for fear of explosions in the burning building, which was a paint store. On this account some telegrams were not answered as promptly as they might have been.

John Sterrett is again at his post at McKellar & Winterson's and is seemingly fully recovered from his attack of pneumonia.

H. J. Millatt, Kansas City, was a visitor last week.

Those intending to go to Indianapolis should notify E. F. Winterson, 45 Wabash avenue, at once so they may have accommodation in the special car. The party will leave on the Pan Handle train leaving the Union station at 8:40 p. m. next Tuesday, February 18. There promises to be quite a large party.

Henry Muno, son of John Muno, is confined to his home by an attack of pneumonia and typhoid.

The weather is much milder than last week though still snappy at times.

Bulbs was the subject for discussion at the meeting of the Florists' Club Wednesday evening, accompanied by an exhibition of bulbous flowers.

PHILADELPHIA.

The season has closed with a rush: everybody has been busy, busy as they could be. The extreme cold made flowers scarce enough to keep buyers on the alert and prices were firm. Now we have Lent. David Rust, secretary Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, who is in position to know, says that Lent has made very little difference for the past few years. Let us hope it will be so this year.

White roses have been in exceptionally good demand; rather unusual at this time, when pink is supposed to have the call. Samuel S. Pennock has received some very fine Liberty this week which sell readily. The decorators have been extremely busy; so many things being crowded together just before Lent. Julius Wolf, Jr., had all he could do in this line. Galax leaves are taking the place of ivy in many of our leading stores. At Habermehl's they make a beautiful wreath of galax leaves combined with a bunch of pink roses tied with white gauze ribbon.

Thomas Meehan & Sons have a novelty in Primula vulgaris, a plant which appeals to the heart of the lover of old-fashioned flowers.

Charles H. Fox, one of our most successful up town florists, who has also been engaged in the hotel business at Atlantic City for the past two years, has decided to give up his retail flower store and devote himself to the hotel business at Atlantic, where he will purchase property. His store at Twenty-first and Columbia avenue will be offered for sale next month. Here is a good chance for the right man.

The new rose Sunrise is creating a favorable impression in this city. It is a good rose and should be grown by every florist.

Charles Krueger, Reading Terminal, finds an active demand for violets and carnations. Many of the latter are grown by his firm, Krueger Bros., at Narberth, Pa.

Charles Fox, Broad and Thompson streets, is cheerful about Lent. He had a large dinner and a golden wedding on Ash Wednesday. PHIL.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Last week trade was very good and the demand for first-class stock was great on account of several big weddings, which used up quantities of stuff; this was particularly true of roses, which were in great demand. Never were roses so scarce as the past week, and every rose that came in, good or bad, was picked up and almost fought for by the trade. The growers surely got a good price for what is usually called rubbish at this time of the year, from $4 to $10 was the asking price. This morning (Monday) the roses seem better and as the receipts were larger, the wholesalers think that the scarcity will be at an end by the last of the present week. Beauties of good quality are very hard to find; a few with 6 and 12-inch stems were seen last week, which averaged from $4 to $10 per 100.

Carnations are selling well and quite a lot are coming in and are of fine quality. The fancy sorts of Crane, Lawson, Crocker, White Cloud and Joost bring as high as $4, while good carnations bring $2 and $3, only a few selling below these figures. There was also a big demand for violets, and Californias can be sold over any other sort. Doubles are quite plentiful but sell slowly at 50 cents, while Californias bring $1 per 100 for the best.

All bulb stock sold well, and Romans, valley, paper whites and daffs brought the usual prices. Klem's tulips at Kuehn's are very fine and are bringing $3 and $4. Callas bring $10 and good, long Harrisiis $12.50 and $15. While there is not an over supply, none of the above mentioned stock can be called scarce.

From Wednesday on, weddings and receptions will be few and far between as Lent will put an end to those events.

Shipping trade has been rather slow owing to the bad spell of weather we have been having for the past two weeks.

Notes.

Arthur Ellison of Ellison & Tesson went to Little Rock, Ark., last week to decorate for a large wedding. He has now returned and is much pleased with his trip.

Wm. Hueke, of Belleville, is sending a fine lot of fancy carnations to this market, the best being Lawson. Frank Ellis is handling Mr. Hueke's stock.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, was in town Saturday calling on the trade. Mr. Guy would like a match game between the Belleville and St. Louis florists some time during Lent.

C. C. Sanders, F. J. Meinhardt and Frank Ellis paid a visit to the craft at Kirkwood one day last week and found them all in good shape, especially Billy

At the last meeting of the State Florists' Association the principal business was in connection with the coming carnation convention. All the committees made favorable reports and everything is working out nicely. Estimates of what each committee will need in the line of finances were made and it was found that the finance committee had raked up a sufficient number of the almighty dollars to meet all the demands, which was very gratifying indeed.

Now we hope for a week of good weather, a large attendance and a large number of exhibits to make this the record convention in the history of the society. A. B.

DELAYED MATTER.

Wednesday being a holiday (Lincoln's birthday) there were but two deliveries of mail in Chicago, the last one at 10 a. m., and this, in addition to the fact that many mail trains are arriving late no ful accounts for the fact that reports from some of our regular correspondents had not arrived in time for this issue.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The New Haven County Horticultural Society held its first annual dinner since its reorganization nineteen months ago, at the Tontine hotel on February 4, there being about fifty members and friends present. Palms were suitably interspersed about the dining room and the table was tastefully decorated with smilax, primulas, carnations and Lorraine begonia. A good orchestra being in attendance, played during and after the dinner.

The president of the society, Mr. John N. Champion, presided and acted as toastmaster and he filled the bill to a nicety. He was supported at the cross table by Mr. Stewart, Boston; Mr. Hulse, Hartford; Mr. Keith, Bridgeport, vice-president of the society; Mr. Gustave Amrhyn, superintendent of parks, New Haven; Mr. E. J. Morse, Mr. A. N. Farnham, Mr. Robert Veitch and Mr. E. L. Baldwin. Among those seated at the central table we noted Mr. David Kydd, treasurer; Mr. Thos. Pettit, secretary; Messrs. William Gardiner, Robert Angus, Robert Paton, William Ferrier and John Doughty, committee. Other members present we noted were: Mr. James Morrison, Mr. Fred Horne, Mr. W. J. Rowe, Mr. G. Brenton, Mr. James McDonald, Mr. David Mustard, Mr. John Handyside, Mr. Carl Ginter, Mr. Grove, Mr. A. J. Thompson, Mr. Joseph Adcock, Mr. W. S. Swayne, Mr. Charles Noll, Mr. Sylvester Leahy, Mr. Gustave Schaffer, Mr. Thomas Ney, Mr. William Hawkins, Mr. Harry Tricartin, Mr. J. W. Woodward and others.

After full justice had been done to an excellent dinner provided by Mr. George White, the popular proprietor of the Tontine, Mr. John N. Champion, president, in his opening remarks said it gave him great pleasure to see so many members and friends of the society present and thought it augured well for the future success of the society. He then gave an interesting sketch of the history of the society, it first being organized in 1830, one year after the Massachusetts Society, thus being the second oldest in the United States. It appears to have lain dormant for some years and then to have sprung into existence again, and so forth. He next gave a brief summary of the progress in horticulture during the past fifty years. Every attention was given the president's remarks and they were well received by the members present.

The next call was for Mr. Stewart, Boston, who after a few preliminary remarks mixed with wit and humor, highly amusing the boys, said: "I wish you great success in your new undertaking. It is easy to organize a society but it is hard to stay there." He urged all to pull one way and that the way to success.

Mr. Hulse, Hartford, spoke briefly, advising that attention be paid to hardy perennials and ornamental shrubs. Mr. Hulse was one of the judges at our fall show and is very popular among the craft.

Mr. John Doughty was next called upon. He said, despite the statement made by some to the contrary, this society was bound to succeed. He was glad to see so good a gathering of members around the festive board; thought it gave proof of the right spirit needed to make the society a success. He strongly advocated exhibits of rare and meritorious plants and flowers at the regular meetings of the society, making an earnest appeal to all present to be united and work as one for the one interest we all have at heart.

The following members made a few informal remarks in support of those already given: Mr. Thompson, Mr. Angus, Mr. Ferrier, Mr. Gardiner and Mr. Keith. All were unanimous that it was the best and most enjoyable time the members have had. John Doughty.

THE Kansas City Flower Show

OF 1901 WAS THE GREATEST SUCCESS EVER KNOWN IN FLOWER SHOW HISTORY

THE Kansas City Flower Show was built in less than 60 days in the face of statements of people posted in flower shows that it would take two years to build it. The Kansas City Flower Show broke every record in every way. It kept every promise, it offered the biggest premiums, it paid every award dollar for dollar, and it paid them all the day the show closed. It had paid admissions of over 52,000. It gave every visitor more than his money's worth. It didn't have a protest filed. The exhibitors who were here in 1901 all voluntarily promised to be here in 1902. Uncle John Thorpe, who was in a greater measure than any other man responsible for the success of the Show last year, will be the Superintendent in 1902. F. J. Taggart, a member of the Board of Directors of Convention Hall, who was Director General last year, will be D. G. this year. A thousand prominent business men who backed this Show with their time, money, and influence last year, will push it along this year.

THE DATES OF THE FLOWER SHOW THIS YEAR WILL BE, NOV. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

The 1902 premiums will be bigger—the show will be bigger and better—the interest deeper. Schedule in a short time.

THERE'S MONEY IN IT! GO FOR IT!

THERE'S GLORY IN IT! GROW FOR IT!

F. J. TAGGART,
DIRECTOR GENERAL.

JOHN THORPE,
SUPERINTENDENT.

GERMANTOWN, PA.

The February meeting of the Germantown Horticultural Society was held on Monday evening. Mr. J. Otto Thilow, of the firm of Henry A. Dreer, read a carefully prepared paper on "Sowing Seeds" that proved most interesting. Mr. Thilow said that amateurs generally sowed their seeds too deep. He gave a description of the treatment required by many different kinds of seeds. In reply to a question Mr. Thilow said that no seedsman's catalogue was nearly large enough to give a detailed account of how to sow seeds. The essayist was warmly applauded.

The exhibits were of unusual interest. Besides those from local growers, C. W. Ward, Cottage Gardens, Queens, N. Y., sent four vases of carnations; Harry Fenn, a large, deep crimson; J. H. Manley, fine bright scarlet; Viola Allen, white, pink markings, and Golden Beauty, large, lightly penciled with pink. All were very much admired and made a most creditable exhibit. Arthur Herrington, Florham Farms, Madison, N. J., sent a fine bunch of Gerbera Jamesonii, the Barburton or Transvaal Daisy. The bunch made a much finer showing than when shown before the Philadelphia Florists' Club a month earlier. As seen at Germantown, it was certainly a fine thing and won many friends. The H. A. Dreer Co., Riverton, N. J., exhibited Clematis indivisa in full bloom; very pretty it was, too. It is described as doing best when out in the ground in a greenhouse. When in a cool temperature it will grow luxuriantly. It is not a new plant but it is rare.

All the above exhibits received the society's high commendation. The question box was a feature of this meeting.

BUFFALO.

I was bragging about the beautiful winter two weeks ago and it was corroborated by one weather sargent, who in his report of January said: "The month was charming." But, oh my, we have been paying up for it since with large interest. We have just passed through about as tough a ten days as I can remember of late. A 60-mile gale all night and the thermometer zero and below will make you wish for spring, even if it is hurrying you on to "that bourne from which no traveler returns."

But we are all alive and some of us are going to venture as far as Indianapolis. I can't say how many, but we have strong hopes of W. J. Palmer, Charles Guenther, Prof. Cowell, W. S. and son, Kasting sure, and perhaps another. There is bound to be a fine convention in that beautiful city of the middle west. E. G. Hill said at Pittsburg some years ago that Indianapolis was not west but a very good place to stop off as you were going west. So we are going to take his advice this time. Our club meets Wednesday night to decide on hour of departure, route, etc., but there is not much choice of route with us as all we have to do is to get aboard of a car of the grand, smooth Lake Shore Railroad and in twelve hours it will land us in the convention city. The New York delegates may, I suppose, choose to climb the western portion of the Appalachian mountains, but if they choose to come this civilized route they might let us know so that we could have the honor and pleasure of their company.

Business can be called decidedly quiet but with no stock going to waste. Impossible for a great quantity of flowers to be produced in the "atmospheric conditions" of the past two weeks.

John Barclay, the Scotch-American who speaks with the soft, melodious dialect of the Grampian mountains, has just been here. John is a good judge of all hortiendtural products, including mountain dew, that good invigorator of his native heath.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

The annual convention and exhibition of the American Carnation Society will be held at Indianapolis, Wednesday and Thursday of next week, February 19 and 20. The meeting will no doubt be as interesting and instructive as those of previous years, and the exhibition will in all likelihood surpass any previous one by the society. Any florist who can arrange to go to Indianapolis and fails to do so will miss a great opportunity. We learn that there will be brisk competition in the classes for standard varieties, and when in addition to viewing all the novelties we can inspect the best results of our crack growers with the standard varieties it is bound to be vastly instructive.

If you believe you can line up with or surpass other good growers here is your opportunity to demonstrate your ability and get some cash at the same time. It is a national tournament and there is glory for the winners as well as satisfaction and cash.

If you haven't had a premium list you can get one by addressing Albert M. Herr, Secretary, Lancaster, Pa.

TICKETS TO INDIANAPOLIS.

We hear of a number who intend to be present at the Indianapolis convention of the Carnation Society and who say that they cannot take advantage of the one-third return fare as they want to visit other points from Indianapolis and return by other routes.

Those who do this should not fail to secure a certificate when they buy their ticket, and have it indorsed by the railroad agent at the meeting, just the same as though they expected to use it, as it will then count in the 100 required to assure the one-third return fare to those who can use it.

To obtain a certificate costs you nothing and it may mean a great deal to the majority of your brother florists in attendance at the meeting. So be sure to get a certificate whether you expect to use it or not. And be sure to have it signed by the railroad agent at the meeting. When 100 of these certificates have been presented to him for signature the rate of one-third fare for the return ticket becomes operative.

TRIP TO JOLIET.

For the accommodation of delegates to the convention at Indianapolis, and who are expecting to go as far as Chicago, James Hartshorne, of the Chicago Carnation Company, intends running a special car on the Rock Island road from Chicago, to stop at their greenhouses at Joliet, and return. All those who are likely to accept this invitation please send a postal notifying him what hour and day would best suit their convenience, so that his arrangements may be made so as not to conflict with any of their own plans. Watch for him at Indianapolis and he will notify you as to the arrangements he has made.

In next week's issue we shall print a report of the annual meeting and exhibition of the American Carnation Society at Indianapolis. Send ads for this number.

The Florists' Manual, by William Scott, is a whole Library on Commercial Floriculture.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The weather has been very severe since my last report, a regular blizzard accompanied by snow storms that seriously impeded traffic of all kinds. We are now getting a little sunshine and hope the severe cold snap is at an end.

In spite of the bad weather trade has continued good, particularly shipping orders, which have kept the supply of roses and carnations so short as to amount to a scarcity, roses at times being unobtainable. In carnations, red and white, were the scarcest; prices remain unchanged; the quality of carnations and roses is steadily improving.

Prosperity is becoming more and more popular, and that and Lawson promise to be heavily planted for next season as the best varieties to grow for fancy flowers, outside of white.

The following florists will attend the carnation convention: Henry Smith, George F. Crabb and Alfred Hanna. Charles Chadwick and Eli Cross will go if possible.

The danger of a coal famine is at an end, as all coal dealers have a sufficient supply on hand to carry their patrons along safely. G. F. C.

Deutzia Lemoinei This fine variety is now one of the standard forcing plants; its large pure white flowers produced in large cone-shaped panicles place it at the head of the list: we have an immense stock, strong two-year-old, suitable for 6 and 7 inch pots, $1.00 per dozen; $8.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000.

SEDIMENT IN HOT WATER PIPES.

I wondered why my return pipes did not radiate heat as they used to till I found out by a broken hub that some pipes are nearly entirely filled with a yellowish mud. They are hot water pipes, and have lain undisturbed for about ten years. What would you advise me to do?.—F. B.

Replying to the inquiry of F. B., the simplest method of getting rid of the accumulation of mud would be, when the season's firing is done, to open the valves and air vents, and after seeing that the drainage in the cellar is in good order, to break an elbow or other large fitting on the return at the lowest point of the system near the boiler, breaking it suddenly, so as to allow the water to rush out of the entire piping system as rapidly as possible and thus carry with it the accumulated sediment.

Another method would be to first mix with the circulating water a chemical which would partially dissolve the mud, but in order to determine the nature of the material thus to be put in the water, it would first be necessary to have a chemical analysis of the mud or other sediment in order to learn definitely what agent would best act as its solvent. I do not think, however, that such procedure would be absolutely necessary, as I find ordinarily that the rush of water as above described will readily remove the accumulation.

TORONTO.

There is at the present time in our city one of the greatest scarcities of roses we have ever experienced. All the principal growers are off crop and very few of the smaller ones seem to have anything in the rose line. Mr. Gilchrist, of Toronto Junction, is one of the fortunates, he having a crop at its height. The weather has been very severe with heavy falls of snow and lots of dark days. Carnations have been plentiful, also most of the bulbous stuff. Violets have been very good, without an oversupply.

The annual dinner of the Toronto Gardeners' and Florists' Association was held last week and a most enjoyable evening was spent by those who attended to the number of something over a hundred. The table decorations, under the able supervision of our affable secretary, W. Jay, Jr., were pretty and artistic. Representatives were present in the persons of J. McHutchison, of New York; Webster, Hamilton; E. Dale, Brampton; Finley, Brampton, who ably gave a good word for the boro' which they represented.

The usual toasts were responded to by members and city guests, and another of those most enjoyable functions in the life of a florist was brought to a successful issue in the "wee sma' hours."

Mr. W. Jay has had some very fine specimens of the Lorraine begonia, which he says sell fast at his retail store.

C. W.

MILWAUKEE.

The cold weather the past week affected trade to some extent, but the supply was correspondingly affected by the same cause. What came in the market was easily disposed of. Roses led the call and good shipping stock was short of demand. There are enough carnations to go around and quality is fine. Violets are not moving very well, excepting very choice grade.

Nic Zweifel is cutting some fancy Cranes and Genevieve Lord which find a ready sale, also some very fine spikes of miniature hyacinths, which move well.

Wm. Edlefsen had a large decoration at the Turner Hall last Saturday which was well done.

Mr. J. D. Eisele, of H. A. Dreer, Philadelphia, and Mr. Cropp, of Chicago, paid us a short visit the past week.

The MRS. E. A. NELSON

Bids fair to become the commercial standard pink carnation. It is a healthy grower, a free and continuous bloomer, and it is sure to thrive wherever grown.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 6th, 1902.

S. S. SKIDELSKY. Dear Sir—We are much pleased with the "Mrs. Nelson" carnation, of which you sent us plants for trial last spring; it has a fine constitution and is an abundant bloomer; the blooms are of good size and the color very desirable. It has good long stiff stems. We think that it will be a standard variety. Yours truly,

THE INDIANAPOLIS CONVENTION

AN INTERESTING MEETING AND A GRAND EXHIBITION.

THE NEW OFFICERS:

Pres., C. W. WARD, - - - Queens, N. Y.
Vice-Pres., H. DAILLEDOUZE, - Brooklyn, N. Y.
Sec'y, ALBERT M. HERR, - Lancaster, Pa.
Treas., F. E. DORNER, - - Lafayette, Ind.

Next Year's Meeting to be held at Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Indianapolis convention was a record breaker, both in attendance and in the magnitude of the exhibition. The attendance from outside points must have been fully two hundred, and the exhibition was a grand one, in both quantity and quality. The exhibition hall was much the finest that has ever been at the disposal of the society, being not only large and lofty but with an abundance of daylight. And the other appointments were equally satisfactory. The meeting hall was in the same building, and was in the form of a small theater. Every one could see and hear to the very best advantage. The whole building had been lavishly decorated with palms and blooming plants by the Indianapolis florists and presented a very festive appearance.

Quite a number of shipments of flowers for exhibition had been delayed in transit and it was noon before the display was fairly in shape; but when staged the collection was superb. It is safe to say that never before were so many extra fine carnation flowers brought together under one roof. We secured a great many photographs of the display in detail and plates from same will appear next week. The Indiana florists are certainly entitled to much credit for supplying such admirable quarters. In looking over this grand display of flowers we could not help comparing it with a former convention of the society in Indianapolis, when one of the small parlors in one of the hotels held the entire display and only a few growers were represented. This year one of the largest halls in the city was filled with flowers and nearly every section of the country was represented.

The Awards.

Following are the awards by the judges, Messrs. C. W. Ward, Adam Graham and E. Buettner, passing upon the new varieties entered for certificates of merit; Messrs. E. Dailledouze, Paul M. Pierson and W. N. Rudd judging in classes A, B, C and D, and Messrs. Ernst Asmus, F. Burki and A. Herrington, awarding the special prizes and those on general display.

In the seedling classes for preliminary certificates Daybreak Perfection, exhibited by Boehringer Bros., Bay City, Mich., scored 74 points; Oriole, pink, exhibited by J. B. Goetz, Saginaw, Mich., 74 points; seedling 11-98, exhibited by Geo. W. Smith, Cleveland, O., 76 points. As none of these reached 85 points no certificates were awarded.

Empire State, white, exhibited by L. E. Marquisee, Syracuse, N. Y., scored 87 points and won a certificate. On 50 white variegated E. G. Hill Co. were first, with Bradt; W. K. Partridge, Lockland, O., second, also with Bradt.

In the classes for 25 blooms, Hill Co. were second on white, with Lorna. On dark pink, Stuart & Haugh were first, with Lawson. On crimson, Hill Co. were first with Roosevelt. On yellow variegated, Hill Co. were first with Gaiety. On white variegated, N. A. Benson, Petersburg, Colo., was first, with Bradt. On any other color, Bassett & Washburn were first with Prosperity.

W. K. Partridge won the special prize offered by Hill Co. and A. M. Herr for the best 50 blooms of Ethel Crocker.

Bassett & Washburn won the hundred dollar silver vase offered by W. A. Proctor for the best separate collection of commercial varieties.

W. K. Partridge the $25 silver vase offered by J. M. McCullough's Sons for best 20 vases, not more than 25 blooms to a vase.

The S. A. F. silver medal for best unintroduced seedling was awarded to E. G. Hill Co., for Adonis; the bronze medal went to R. Witterstaetter, for a white seedling, No. 723 A.

The judges highly commended a fine exhibit of new carnations and seedlings in great variety shown by Baur & Smith, Indianapolis. The variety Elma, and some Crocker seedlings, were given honorable mention.

They also highly commended the fine, artistic displays of well grown plants and flowers by Bertermann Bros., H. W. Rieman and A. Wiegand & Sons, all of Indianapolis.

High commendation was given E. Hukreide & Son, Indianapolis, for very well grown hyacinths, tulips, and other bulbous flowers.

Honorable mention was given E. A. Nelson, Indianapolis, for a meritorious exhibit of carnation Mrs. E. A. Nelson, and roses.

Honorable mention to W. J. & M. S. Vesey, Ft. Wayne, Ind., for a fine vase of Lawson carnations.

John Hartje, Indianapolis, was highly commended for an excellent lot of Crocker and Jubilee carnations.

Honorable mention was given E. H. Hunt, Chicago, for a fine display of florists' supplies. The J. W. Sefton Mfg. Co., Chicago, highly commended for display of cut flower boxes. Excelsior Wire Works, Indianapolis, honorable mention for wire flower stands.

In their report the judges made several recommendations, as follows:

First—There should be a superintendent of the exhibition.

Second—All exhibits should be staged by classes, such an arrangement greatly facilitating the work of the judges and making errors or omissions less likely to occur.

Third—That regular exhibition entry cards be used and same enclosed in envelopes.

Owing to delayed trains quite a number of flowers arrived too late to be judged in any of the general classes, among them those of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill.; Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.; Wm. Nicholson, Framingham, Mass.; L. E. Marquisee, Syracuse, N. Y.; C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y.; M. A. Patten, Lowell, Mass.; H. M. Altick, Dayton, O.

[Two-thirds Natural Size.]

The Sessions.

A preliminary meeting was held Wednesday morning to appoint judges, but the real opening session was at 2:30 in the afternoon.

C. W. Ward, President-Elect American Carnation Society.

In the absence of President Bertermann, who was unfortunately obliged to be in California on account of poor health, Vice-President Lemon welcomed the delegates in a few words and introduced Mayor Bookwalter who made a very happy address. He not only believed there was much virtue in him who caused two blades of grass to grow where one grew before, but he had the greatest admiration for those who brought things of beauty into existence and considered such as benefactors to mankind. In examining the magnificent flowers on exhibition he had mentally compared them with the pinks that grew in his mother's garden in his boyhood days and could but marvel at the progress which had been made as the result of the skill and patience of such men as composed the society he was rejoiced to heartily welcome to Indianapolis.

On behalf of the Society of Indiana Florists Mrs. M. S. Vesey read a very interesting and pithy address of welcome in which she pointed out the numerous contributions made to our list of standard varieties by the florists of Indiana, and noted the marvelous progress made during recent years. "The carnation of yesterday is not for today," said she, and the march of progress must continue.

Mr. C. W. Ward responded on behalf of the society, voicing the appreciation of what the local people were doing. He said the title Hoosier had a remarkable derivation. In the early days they went through the woods with cocked gun in hand and when they met they leveled their pieces and cried "Whose-yure?" But they don't do it any more. Now they throw up both hands and say "Take everything you want," just as the mayor had done.

President Bertermann's address was then read by Vice-President Lemon, who on his own behalf suggested the offering of a medal to be awarded to the introducer of the best new variety by popular vote.

Secretary Herr read his annual report and suggested the immediate appointment of a committee to prepare a premium list for next year.

Treasurer Dorner's report showed a balance of $743.58 in the working fund and $1,650 in the permanent fund.

There was some little discussion as to the wisdom of continuing the appropriation for badges, but when it came to a vote there was a large majority in favor of continuing to have badges each year.

E. G. Gillett read his paper entitled "A Criticism of Growers' Methods."

Mr. C. W. Ward reported for the committee on incorporating the society and recommended incorporating under the laws of the state of New York, which have recently been made very liberal to corporations of all kinds.

Wednesday Evening.

At the Wednesday evening session Mr. W. N. Pierson read his paper on Sterilization of Soil, which was discussed by Messrs. Ward, Rudd, Peirce, Dorner and Johnson, the general opinion being that sterilization was good for many things.

Mr. Gillett's paper was discussed by Mr. Dailledouze, who described his method of caring for and packing flowers.

The reports of the judges were read and accepted.

On behalf of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the President of the Borough of Brooklyn, Mr. C. W. Ward extended an invitation to the society to meet in Brooklyn, N. Y., next year. Mr. G. A. Rackham of Detroit said the Detroit delegation had come with the intention of taking the convention to their city next year, but in view of the claims made for an eastern meeting in 1903 they would withdraw in favor of Brooklyn, but that they would be on hand next year and would there decline in no one's favor.

The New Officers.

At the Thursday morning session, officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

President, C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y.; vice president, H. Dailledouze, Flatbush, Brooklyn, N. Y.; secretary, Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa.; treasurer, F. E. Dorner, Lafayette, Ind.

Brooklyn, N. Y., was selected as the place for the next convention.

The recommendation of the judges regarding a superintendent of the exhibitions was concurred in and the executive committee given power to act. Messrs. Wm. Scott, Wm. Nicholson and W. K. Partridge were appointed a committee to prepare the premium list for next year.

Mr. C. W. Ward said he had not prepared a paper upon the subject of sub-irrigation but was prepared to answer questions. Mr. Rudd asked: "Would you recommend an ordinary grower to take up sub-irrigation?" Mr. Ward replied: "If he has the capital to put it in and the brains to run it right, yes."

Mr. Herrington asked: "How much capital and how much brains for 100 feet of bench?" Mr. Ward replied: "From $1.50 to $3 per running foot of bench and all the brains you can get in one head." In response to other questions Mr. Ward said that in making comparisons with carnations he found that the sub-irrigated benches gave about one-third better results than the surface watered ones, but that they required more care in watering. He thought the principal advantage was probably in having the moist bricks between the roots of the plants and the heading pipes which absorbed the heat and moisture and gave it off more uniformly. He has his benches so arranged as to insure a circulation of air among the bricks and also so that the water can be drawn off below when by any error an excess has been given. His soil being a light sandy loam requiring much surface watering to insure sufficient moisture he thought that sub-irrigation would probably show better results with him than with those having heavier soils. Other detail business was disposed of and the convention then adjourned to meet in Brooklyn, N. Y., next year. The banquet held in the evening was a very enjoyable affair. All the entertainment features were admirably carried out by the Indianapolis florists and the convention of 1902 will be a pleasant memory to all present.

There was no trouble about an insufficient number of railroad certificates to insure the one-third return fare. The number was nearer two hundred than the one hundred required. A late addition to the exhibition was two immense bunches of superb Princess of Wales violets, from Wm. Sims, Cliftondale, Mass.

President Bertermann's Address.

Members and Friends of the American Carnation Society:—Again we are assembled, this being the eleventh annual meeting of this progressive society. As there is much business of importance before us to be taken care of, your President will confine himself to a few thoughts as they have occurred to him.

The Indiana boys are happy to have you all with them in the great carnation belt, in the region where the best blood of the carnation of today originated. When you met with us some years ago a start had been made, but that meeting helped to make our growers further progressive, in the line of new seedlings and new varieties worthy of trial by anyone. Since then, carnations have grown right along in quality, and it is wonderful how the public has gradually taken up the demand for strictly fine flowers. However, carnation flowers of all kinds, depending on the location, are in favor with everybody. While at times the immense glut on the principal markets are somewhat discouraging, however, these times are of short durations; and a remedy—who will find it?

Speaking of strictly first-class, fine flowers, they are with us; but isn't it a mistake to also bring up the prices to fabulous figures, during favorable times? While the retailer wants the best, and is willing to pay a top price, however, there should be a limit.

This society and Florists' Clubs all over the country have done much to popularize the divine flower in holding free exhibitions, special exhibitions, etc.; and much more can be done in that direction. A noticeable fact and one of satisfaction, was the select and splendid displays of carnation blooms at several of the fall exhibitions. Was it the favorable weather during previous months, or are carnation plants taking a firmer hold earlier than formerly?

Right here let us consider varieties doing well in one section of the country while in another they are nearly a failure. Could a division be made?—trials fixed at different points?

There is much growing demand for summer carnation flowers. Some growers should satisfy the demands of retailers in this respect. Some experiments with incandescent lights for growing carnations at night have been made successfully; but would it justify the means to grow under artificial lights in times of scarcity of cut blooms?

The Society of Indiana Florists, during last fall's great chrysanthemum show and floral festival, adopted resolutions recommending that the carnation be adopted by this society as the national flower. A grand speech given by the Hon. John L. Griffith, of Indianapolis, during one evening of the exhibition, showed the public to be in full sympathy with the movement. There is very much in favor of such a move; everything is in favor of our divine flower being placed on the national pedestal. A free discussion is desired, and everyone should be prepared to say something when the time comes.

While you are deliberating over the many interests of our sturdy young society, do not forget the sociabilities. Many are against too much sociability, but your president, for one, would like to see everybody enjoy himself on his short vacation from home. The boys of Indiana will give you both—work and play.

New Carnation J. H. Manley.

Secretary Herr's Report.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen, of the American Carnation Society: Your secretary reports having issued the proceedings in due time, the preliminary premium list in July, the regular premium list in January and several circulars during the year, all of which have been mailed to every paid up member of the society, no one ever being omitted.

The question of the permanent fund involves considerable begging on the part of the secretary and is something of a nuisance. If we could decide on a certain amount, raise it and be done with it, outside of the life membership money, it would be better all around. The interest from this money should be placed in the working fund of the society, as our expenses are increasing every year and the annual dues of $2 from some 200 members does not reach far in paying a stenographer, the printing of the reports, the expenses of the exhibition and a hundred and one little items. We have been helped out considerable by the advertising in the premium list and the members should patronize these advertisers whenever possible.

Our badges and recognition cards as now conducted are an annual expense of some thirty dollars. The society should take into consideration the benefits derived and decide if we shall continue as we have started.

The labels are rather crude affairs, being the result of some of your secretary's economizing. We should have a neat uniform label, easily attached, and furnish them to intending exhibitors in such numbers as they may need and let the exhibitor have the names printed or typewritten on. If entries were made in good time this could easily be attended to by your secretary, but at this date, February 13, there are three entries in the hands of your secretary and one of these gives the names wanted for labels, the others do not. February 15 is given in the premium list as the latest day for entries to reach the secretary, the same notice was inserted in the circular sent with your badge, and in each of the trade papers so that there is no excuse for piling up all the work on your secretary for the last two days before the meeting, and expecting to have it properly attended to.

All entries received on the 16th or 17th, that do not show by the postmark on the envelope that they were mailed in time to reach me the 15th will be charged $1 for each entry, according to rules, and if the society thinks this too stringent they can rescind this rule and reimburse those who have paid.

Interest in the society is steadily on the increase, and our membership is growing in a good healthy manner, so that we can congratulate ourselves on the standing of our society to-day.

Respectfully submitted,

Albert M. Herr,
Secretary.

STERILIZATION FOR STEM-ROT.

By Wallace R. Pierson.

[Read before the American Carnation Society at Indianapolis.]

Among the enemies of the carnation there is one to be more dreaded than all others and I have been asked to bring forward for the consideration of the society, "Sterilization as a Preventive of Stem-Rot." I believe this matter was discussed at the Baltimore meeting, but I find no one who has carried out a thorough test of sterilization, and, while our experiments have not been by any means as thorough as they might have been, yet their extensiveness may make them valuable and I take pleasure in presenting a report of our work.

It has been my good fortune, the past three years, to be associated with Dr. G. E. Stone, of the Hatch Experiment Station of Amherst, Mass., and it is to him that I owe my interest in sterilized soil. While a student at college I followed the experiments of Dr. Stone on the cultivation of lettuce, and taking at the same time the study of carnation diseases, I found that we are fighting a common enemy with the lettuce growers, namely, the sterile fungus "Rhizoctonia" which causes the so-called "wet-rot" of carnations. This has been described in Bul. 186 of the Cornell Experiment Station and no doubt this fungus is well understood. I will not attempt a description of it, but I wish to quote a paragraph from that bulletin, which reads: "This stem-rot is one of the most troublesome of the carnation diseases and probably occurs throughout the whole United States wherever the carnation is grown. Frequently entire houses of mature plants are destroyed by it. During the past autumn it appears to have been unusually prevalent. It attacks plants of all ages both in the field and in the greenhouse, and is one of the principal causes of damping off of carnation cuttings. In greenhouse benches it spreads slowly through the soil from one plant to another; but according to our experiments never through the air as from one bench to another. Its principal mode of dissemination is by means of affected plants and cuttings."

This fungus also attacks lettuce and Bul. 69 of the Hatch Experiment Station treats of the attack of the fungus on lettuce in a very clear and concise manner. Comparing these two and knowing that sterilization prevented the attack on lettuce I became convinced that "wet-rot" of carnations could largely be prevented by the same method. There is, however, an important point to be taken into consideration and this is, that in the growing of lettuce the seed can be started in sterilized soil and the plants grown in it from seed, while with carnations the planting in the field would subject them to the attacks of the fungus and cause error in our work even were they rooted in sterilized sand and potted in sterilized soil.

There is another rot of carnations with which we are all acquainted and this is the subject of an article by Mr. Wm. C. Sturgis, which may be found in the Report of the Connecticut Experiment Station for 1897. This is known as "dry-rot" and I again take the liberty of quoting: "The spores of the fungus are apparently able to retain their vitality for several months and to live over winter in the earth. The fact that the disease can be transferred to sound cuttings by planting the same in soil containing vegetable matter and impregnated with spores of the fungus, indicates that the spores can thrive in such soil and thence gain access to the tissues of the plant. Consequently when the disease has been present in the greenhouse the old soil should be completely removed, the house thoroughly fumigated with sulphur and the benches refilled with fresh soil. Abundant moisture and an excess of vegetable matter in the soil afford conditions favorable to the development of this Fusarium. These should be avoided as far as possible. Wherever practicable sterilizing the soil by means of steam or hot air would be effective in preventing the attacks of the fungus. In this case, diseased cuttings could be the only possible cause of contamination."

The preceding shows that we are working under difficulties and that our tests are liable to error, for I have no way of knowing what percentage of my plants were already attacked by rot when they were benched, but I will give you as accurately as I can the facts as they really are and you may judge from them whether there was sufficient gain to warrant the expense.

We have this year four houses, each three hundred feet in length, devoted to carnations. These differ in width, being thirty-six, thirty, sixteen and sixteen feet respectively. The first house planted was one of the sixteen-foot houses and in this there are two benches, four feet four inches in width, running the length of the house, a cross-walk at the center dividing these, making practically four benches, each a trifle less than one hundred and fifty feet in length. Let us follow the method of handling a house, and for the sake of convenience call the benches by numbers. Let us designate the right-hand benches Nos. 1 and 2 and the left-hand benches Nos. 3 and 4. The soil is wheeled in on the left-hand benches and we fill the right-hand benches as we would fill them with no reference to sterilizing; filling each bench even with soil after putting about an inch of well rotted cow manure in the bottom. We then lay our system of coils and after putting on eight-inch side boards we fill the soil for bench No. 3 and bench No. 4 into Nos. 1 and 2, or rather, Nos. 1 and 2 extended but in reverse order; that is, with the manure which is to go into the bottom of the other benches on top. This is now ready for the steam, which is gotten up and turned on by the night man, as we usually do this work at night, and when steam at a pressure of from thirty to forty pounds has been forced through the soil for a couple of hours, complete destruction of all animal and vegetable life is assured.

Now to describe the coils. We run a temporary main from the boiler of 2½-inch pipe and extend this through the center walk the length of the house. At distances of fifty feet we put in tees and connect at these points with the coils by means of hose, which can be obtained especially adapted for the purpose. The coils are made up of headers and perforated pipe. The length of the header we vary with the width of the bench, screwing on nips and tees as needed. This is necessary, for the coil must be as wide as the bench to insure approximately perfect sterilization. At right-angles to the headers and parallel to each other we run perforated pipe. These are about ten inches apart. Thus, a bench four feet four inches in width would require a header four feet two inches in length and five lengths of 1½-inch perforated pipe. We have found that we can handle steam to the best advantage by having headers fifty feet apart and by connecting each header with the main; and we have also found it economy to have the whole house ready and to sterilize it all at the same time, as it requires but little more steam to do this than to sterilize a single section, and time will be lost waiting for the soil to become cool enough to permit handling. To do this twelve headers and about fifteen hundred feet of perforated pipe are necessary, but if much of this work is to be done the outlay will not be great in proportion. Second-hand pipe is just as serviceable and if leaky so much the better, for the more leaks the less boring there will have to be done.

The question of expense is important, for to have the method practicable there must be a limit to the cost of the operation. We compute the cost of sterilizing a house 300x16 feet at about $25, or in other words, it doubles the expense of preparing a house for planting. This is, however, a comparatively small consideration, for if there is a saving of fifty plants to do a season's work, counting on a return of fifty cents per plant, there will be a saving of twenty-five dollars, or the cost of sterilization, and I think that our results have shown a greater saving than this by far. The work of the Hatch Experiment Station has given some valuable results and yet their computations on the cost of sterilization can not be sustained by general practice, for it is a much simpler operation to sterilize soil where there are no benches than where benches are used, as in our carnation houses.

Our first carnation house benched was planted with the Marquis and there was a loss of perhaps a dozen plants from stem-rot in this house. I did not work the houses the year previous but I remember the representation in some parts of the bench of Marquis at December 1 was very scattering. Compare our loss of perhaps a half dozen Lawson, from some fifteen hundred plants, with that we have heard reported by others (I call to mind one report of 1,500 from 5,000), and I think you will agree with me that our loss has been slight. It has been so slight indeed that we consider it to have been entirely overcome. We have, however, suffered more from "dry-rot" than from "wet-rot," but even this has been small when compared with the loss of previous years. Taking the result as a whole I feel safe in saying that we have found sterilization a preventive of stem-rot.

In conclusion let me say that I do not believe sterilization a cure for stem-rot but rather a method of prevention. I look at sterilization as an insurance that you place upon a crop. You insure a vessel load of coal, yet the plants on which you depend to pay for the coal you do not insure without sterilization, and when this can be done at a reasonable expense I believe in so doing. I do not think that better carnations can be grown in sterilized soil than in soil which is not sterilized, but I believe it gives you a greater certainty of keeping your benches full and thus a greater certainty of good financial returns. It gives you the assurance at the start that your soil and benches are free from fungus, from eel-worm, from earth-worm, from aphis, from red-spider and in addition from weed-seed. This latter fact would alone make sterilization of value. If we know exactly what our soil contains and can be sure that we are not taking in what will be detrimental, there is no need for sterilizing, but this we do not know. We know, however, that it makes us practically certain of our crop and this certainly repays us for our labor.

We have grown roses, chrysanthemums and violets, in addition to carnations, in sterilized soil and with results which have exceeded our anticipations. I will be glad to throw more light on this subject if it is in my power to do so and I thank you for the honor which you have done my father and myself in asking for this report, which I take pleasure in presenting you.

New Carnation Golden Beauty.

A CRITICISM OF GROWERS' METHODS.

By E. G. Gillett.

[Read before the American Carnation Society at Indianapolis.]

When Mr. W. N. Rudd, at a meeting at Buffalo last August, suggested that I prepare a paper on this subject, he also guaranteed to fight all my battles should I tread a little heavy on some growers' toes, so if there is any kick coming when I get through, just kick Bro. Rudd.

Growers' methods are divided into classes, large, medium and small. Growers themselves are divided into the same number of classes. The larger class are those who are backed by sufficient money to have all the needful appliances necessary to conduct their business on a paying basis. If he is not a grower himself he has money enough to buy the brains of someone who does know the latest and best methods of growing flowers, and money enough to hire sufficient help to care for the plants while growing. The medium grower generally has to rely upon his own resources with what help he is able to hire, and the small grower follows suit.

We are all working to the same end, the Almighty Dollar. But how to get that Almighty Dollar is a great stumbling block to many of us. Many dollars are lost yearly by growers who do not know the best methods to pursue after they have grown their flowers ready for market. Of course, the first thing to do is to consign his cut to a commission house to sell, and in order to make money he must make his shipments regularly, and he must stand by his commission man through the gluts that are bound to occur once or twice during the season, instead of hunting up some other market when for a few weeks his sales are not as large as he expects and the reason he well knows. Another and a very important fact the grower must remember, and especially is this true of carnations and roses, is that after cutting they must be placed in a cool room with their stems well submerged in pots of water for at least 12 hours before they are fit to pack and ship to market.

Another important matter is the grading of your flowers. More care should be taken in this, carnations especially. I know that it is a great temptation to many growers to put in ringers. Possibly you will ask me what I mean by ringers. It is simply this, and especially is it so in carnations: In putting carnations up in bunches of 26 when they are selling at $1.50, $2.00, $3.00 and $4.00 per 100, if you can ring in two or three short stemmed inferior blooms to a bunch, see how much more money I am making you will say to yourself? But are you? No. Do you think for one moment that the retailer has not his eyes open? And do you think he does not go down deep into that bunch of carnations and count the ringers? If you think he doesn't just be a commission man for a while and see. We poor devils have to carry water on both shoulders and we catch it coming and going. Gentlemen, I plead of you right here, don't put in ringers, and especially you carnation men. Give the retailer value received for his money, and don't try to make him pay for something that's not worth the price. Be more careful in your grading, and be sure that you put 26 carnations in every bunch. With the above method I will guarantee you will make more money, and there will be no cause for the now many unpleasant remarks.

And right here I would like to say a few words in regard to packing flowers for market. Don't jam their noses tight up against the end of the box, causing them to look as if they had been in a prize fight. Always pack in layers from each end of the box, bringing the bulk of the stems to the center. Then cut a cross piece, place same through the center of the box, press down as tight as you can and fasten securely. In this way your flowers will stay just as you place them and arrive in good condition, it matters not how roughly the express messenger handles them.

Don't sprinkle carnations or roses after you have carefully packed them, especially carnations, as it simply ruins them. I have received many a box of flowers that were virtually ruined that had been treated to the water solution. But I believe growers are beginning to wake up. They are using better methods, they are learning to look after their crops after harvesting, and if they will be a little more careful in grading their stock and growing their flowers, it will be much better for all concerned.

One more point. What grade of carnations should be grown to pay the grower, quality or quantity? You will find growers who differ on this question, but, gentlemen, let me tell you right here that the man who grows quantity of quality is the one who makes the money. All fancies will not do because all people do not care to pay fancy prices. All poor grades will not do, because you can not sell them for a living profit. Then which shall we grow? The mediums that will wholesale at 2, 3 and 4 cents each; these are the money makers, and the ones that will make the growers happy.

When, on Sept. 6, the news was flashed across the continent that the chief magistrate of the United States had been assassinated, there was not a man, woman or child who was not bowed with grief, and especially were the florists of all others. Why? Because it was this grand man who signed the charter that makes the florists of the United States a national body. And not only this, but it was he who loved the carnation above all other flowers and was the prime cause of having it adopted as a Republican emblem, and it is now discussed as the national flower. It was the growers' methods that are the cause of all this; had they not been progressive, they would not have caused the above to be facts.

Only a few years ago the carnation was only an infant, but it had a father in Mr. Fred Dorner, who by his untiring energy has brought the divine flower to the position in society that it has today. Progress in growers' methods has placed the florist in the front rank and the statistics at Washington show that in the United States in 1899 were raised $18,387,420 worth of flowers and foliage plants, with 6,159 establishments, whose land with buildings amounts to $50,619,866. Why should we not be proud of our profession? Why should we not be proud of our growers and their good methods, which have placed us on a level with the best commercial interests of the country? But we will not stop here in our race for supremacy; we must gain more laurels, we must use the better methods that are coming up from day to day, and advance the interests of floriculture as she so justly deserves.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Monday's awakening was a surprise. A genuine old-fashioned blizzard with snow six inches deep at sunrise, and a 50-mile breeze that drifted roads, stagnated business and threatened the greenhouse establishments within 100 miles of New York with destruction. What the "beautiful" may have accomplished at this writing I cannot say, but on Monday night the snow is still falling; the streets are nigh impassable, and not since the great blizzard of 1888 has anything like this wintry condition of things been seen in the metropolis. Fortunately the temperature is mild and no serious damage has yet been reported. Delayed trains and belated shipments have kept both wholesalers and retailers "in hot water" all day.

Fortunately Prince Henry will not arrive before next Saturday, and by that time we are quite likely to see the "opening of spring."

In three weeks the department stores will be dispensing rose bushes and the Easter growers will be happy, for every flowering plant will be sold, and most of them are already engaged. It will be another plant Easter, evidently, and the preparations made by the local plantsmen are in excess of any year in the city's history.

All prices of flowers last week began a retrograde movement, and the average shrinkage was about 20 per cent on roses and carnations. Still the very best Beauties commanded 60 cents, and Liberty, at its best, was worth $5 a dozen.

The novelties in carnations occasionally brought 10 cents. Fortunately the warm weather of Friday and Saturday provided an outlet for an accumulation of the poorer and medium grades of every kind of flower.

Various Items.

A. N. Pierson, Eugene Dailledouze, C. W. Ward, Ernest Asmus and Frank McMahon were the eastern delegation to the Indianapolis convention.

It is reported that David Mellis, of Flatbush, has suffered from a very severe attack of pneumonia, and that Albert Wadley's progress toward recovery is discouraging. Notwithstanding Mr. Wadley's illness, the business of Wadley & Smythe has been immense this season. A decoration by this firm last week at Delmonico's for the wedding of one of the "400" transformed the immense dining rooms into a veritable garden, and was pronounced the most original and unique effort in that line ever seen at this famous resort.

Hodgson & Haufft also distinguished themselves during the past week in similar artistic work.

Window decoration on Saturdays is a feature now with the majority of Broadway and Fifth avenue florists, and the paraders look for it and crowd around the displays eagerly, and far into the night.

A lot of fine flowers from the Lakeview Greenhouses, Jamestown, N. Y., are finding an outlet in New York, shipments having been made to many of the prominent wholesalers. "Walter" must have been telling the "growing department" what a city this is for immediate absorption of anything that has genuine merit in it.

Those express companies who doubled up their rates on empty boxes have had a change of heart already and have gone back to first principles and the regular charges again.

Inventor Krick, of Brooklyn, the "immortal" or immortelle man, has "taken time by the fetlock" again and with the next Christmas bee buzzing in his bonnet has patented a tree holder that will do him credit, as do all his practical inventions.

AUSTIN.

LILY OF THE VALLEY.

A request comes from a subscriber as follows: "Please ask W. S. to continue his article on Lily of the Valley. Tell us of treatment while forcing, temperature, shading, watering, also when to plant Easter crop, and oblige."

Without referring to what I wrote about this beautiful flower in December I will attempt to answer the above, but must first be allowed to say that there are so many much larger growers than I am that I would rather read of their treatment or method than write about mine. However, from middle of January, when first crop of new pips are flowered, till we get the outside flowers we have produced flowers about as good as any we have seen, and 90 to 95 per cent of all the roots put in.

Up to five years ago we used to try several methods, among others putting the roots in flats four inches deep and placing the flats on or over hot water pipes. We also had a bed of sand where the bottom heat was 85 to 90 and the top heat 75. By both these plans we got good flowers occasionally but with no certainty or uniform success. Now we have a box or frame 20 feet long, which incloses four 4-inch hot water pipes. It is simply one-inch boards, which confine the heat both back and front and at both ends. A foot above the pipes are roofing slates, well supported. On the slates is six inches of sand. Ours is lake sand, but bank sand would in my opinion be just as good, and so I think would be finely sifted coal or coke ashes or powdered coke or any material that would let the water pass freely through.

At the level of the surface of the sand there is a 12-inch board hinged, which lets down when we water and when up supports the shading. This is the most important part of this simple little structure, because the spikes should never be wet after the bells are once visible, much less after they begin to show color. And by letting down this hinged board you can run the hose between the rows and soak the sand without wetting a leaf or spike. The sand is about 85 degrees and the atmosphere of the house 55 degrees. Whenever the house rises 10 degrees higher, then the spikes are not as fine; that is, they do not develop every bell so perfectly and more easily wilt.

And for midwinter forcing I would say that the sand at 80 to 85 degrees and the temperature of house 50 would be the ideal conditions. We water every day for the first two weeks and every other day the last week. From time of putting in the roots till the bells are clearly seen we shade with a ½-inch wooden shutter, which is 3x3½ feet, easily lifted off and on, and this covers a batch of 500 roots. Then we shade with a frame on which cheese cloth is tacked. The last two or three days before cutting, if weather is not bright you can remove all shade. Valley should always be cut as soon as every flower is developed, and tied in bunches of 25 and placed for at least 24 hours in cold water before being used.

By putting in regularly every week a batch of roots sufficient for your supply you will never be without this dainty flower. Three weeks under conditions described is time enough for every flower to fully develop, but for Easter crop I would allow 24 or 25 days, because when cut and kept in a cool, dark place it will easily keep a week in perfect condition.

Now, mind, gentle reader, my method is for success in a one-horse small business that grows only for its retail counter, and I hope no Asmus or Cromwell (guiltless of his country's blood) will laugh at such a small quantity as a thousand a week.

I mentioned my bed as having six inches of sand. That I am sure is shallow enough. We used to chop off the roots to within four inches, or even less, of the pip. Nowadays we have the roots five inches long and we believe it is a decided advantage. W. S.

VEGETABLE PLANTS.

Messrs. R. Vincent Jr. & Son, White Marsh, Md., are not only florists but are the largest growers of young vegetable plants in the country.

We present herewith two views from photographs taken at their establishment. One shows a part of their range of glass with boiler house and workshop in the foreground. This building is 30x60 and is also used for drying and storing caladium bulbs. A portion of the packing shed, barn, dwelling, etc., is seen in the background.

The second picture gives a view in one of their vegetable plant houses from a photograph taken January 5. This house is 30x230. Since the photograph was taken the young cabbage plants seen in the picture have been shipped to the Gulf states and the beds reseeded for spring trade.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

The care of young stock will now be one of the principle duties of the grower. When it is remembered that any neglect or carelessness in this matter will be sure to affect the after life of the plant it will be patent that they should at this season have the best of care. Any grower who allows his stock to get stunted while in the pots is handicapping himself for the whole season. Plants of this description are hard to get started in the bench, and never make that free vigorous growth so essential to long stemmed high grade blooms.

As from now on to planting time young stock will require copious supplies of water, it is better to use drainage when shifting from 2½-inch to 3-inch pots, as this will keep the soil from getting sodden. After repotting the plants should be watered well. If the soil is in a nice mellow condition the whole mass of the soil can usually be thoroughly moistened by two applications of water, but if the soil be dry they will require more, as until the whole mass is moistened there is little chance for root action to commence.

A light, airy position, with plenty of ventilation, is absolutely necessary to the health, vigor and stockiness so much required in rose plants. In most well conducted places bench room will be at a premium until after Easter, and the inducements are many to place young stock on any bench that happens to be empty, or to throw out those benches which are not doing so well as the rest of the house; this is poor policy. It must be borne in mind that where old established plants refuse to do well it is hardly fair to expect young stock to thrive, and as on the quality of the young stock depends the next season's success, look particularly to its welfare now.

Keep the syringe going, check mildew, and keep down greenfly. Night temperature should be 56 degrees. Regulate the ventilation so that the increase in temperature during the forenoon will be gradual till it reaches 70 degrees, reducing during the afternoon with the same care.

Grafted Rose Plants.

Will Mr. Ribes please state in the Review whether it is wise to plant grafted roses over for another year in a 6-inch bench, as I have never tried it yet? M. H.

This inquirer fails to state what varieties of roses he wishes to transplant. I presume he means Brides and Bridesmaids. There may be circumstances when it would be good policy to run a house over another season, such as wishing to get blooms during summer, etc., but there is never much profit or satisfaction in transplanting. The majority of growers who have tried this method have found one experience sufficient.

This operation requires a deal of time and skill and the results are almost always disappointing. Grafted stock does no better under this treatment than stock on its own roots. Young healthy stock planted in five inches of soil, and carefully attended to, will certainly give M. H. more satisfaction.

Some Rose Questions.

In a recent issue of your valuable paper I see rye straw recommended in place of sod for the bottoms of rose benches. I would like to know the reason, as roses are certainly very fond of sod and grow finely in benches that have sod at the bottom.

Will double rows of glass lessen the amount of sunlight in a rose house? My employer intends to put double rows of glass (inside and outside rows) on all the houses with the idea of economizing in fuel. The houses are on high land and exposed to very high winds.

Is soft coal more economical than hard coal? We have 8,000 feet of glass, each house disconnected, and from Sept. 1 up to date (Feb. 8) we have burned 70 tons of hard coal in a No. 9 Furman boiler. The houses are all well built. We have two men to run this plant during winter without a fireman. Could we do the same without a fireman using soft coal for fuel? C. G.

The primary object in putting either straw or sods over the spaces in the bottom of the bench is to prevent the soil from running through until it gets settled. By using straw for this purpose the soil can be made of a more uniform depth than if sods are used, unless they are cut very thin and of equal thickness. The sods will if chopped up and incorporated with the soil be of service in keeping the soil open and porous.

The writer has had the experience in one of the cold provinces of Canada of trying double glass in a house for tropical plants. In theory it looks all right, in practice it is all wrong. The air between the glass gets heated and blurs it when the sun shines, and the condensation freezes on the outer glass immediately the outside temperature gets down to 32 degrees. If the house is well built and the glass properly laid, ordinary double thick glass is all that is needed.

Where hot water is used, with no regular night man on duty, I should say that hard coal would be best, as it requires less attention and retains the heat longer than soft coal. Should favor using hard coal in a place of this size, using Furman boilers. Ribes.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The supply has increased and prices have weakened since last report, as expected. The cream of the roses bring $8, with good stock selling at $4 to $6 and the poorer grades at $3 or even $2 on clean up sales. White stock has the best of it at present, and this applies to carnations as well as roses. Very fine carnations can be had for $3, and the range on good stock is from $1.50 to $2.50, with the poorer grades at $1, and we hear of clean up sales of poor colored stock at as low as $6 a thousand. At the same time some fancy Lawsons, Red Bradts, Cranes, etc., are bringing $4 per 100, and the best Prosperity reach as high as $8. There is practically a glut of violets. The best M. Louise still bring $1 a hundred, but large quantities of medium and poor grades are sold at very low figures, in fact down to 10 cents a bunch. Bulbous flowers are even more plentiful than before and move still slower than last week.

Nevertheless the volume of business is large and Lent seems to have had little effect on it so far. Shipping trade continues with little if any diminution.

Various Items.

At the meeting of the city council last Monday evening an effort was made to repeal the order removing all fruit and flower stands from the streets and barring all the street men, but the former action was upheld by a large vote and it looks as though the street men would have to seek some other occupation, for the present at least. The order is so drastic, however, and will be objectionable to so many merchants as well as the street men, that its enforcement may bring about a reaction. Anyway, it will be some little time before this outlet for the poorer grades of stock is reopened, and there is a likelihood of some great gluts of this stock in the near future.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Geraniums.

The weeks remaining now till Easter are likely to find plantmen very crowded, but there are a good many very necessary operations to be done without filling up much additional space. I will suppose that you have been taking off the tops of your 3-inch zonal geraniums. If you have not, even up to this time, it is not too late. There is lots of time for the plants to break out and make good, branchy plants and plenty of time for the cuttings now potted up to make useful bedding plants. I say potted up because the zonal geranium should never go into the sand. It's a waste of labor and they really do not make as good plants as when potted at once into a 2 or 2½-inch pot—only pot firmly, don't do a lot of thumbing on the surface and leave the soil loose around base of cutting, but get your fingers down into the soil and they will act as a wedge and tighten up every particle of soil, and with these unrooted cuttings and freshly potted off cuttings that have roots, and seedlings that you are transplanting, it is most essential that the soil should be compact around the roots.

Seeds.

It will soon be time to sow the earliest asters. Sow also petunias unless you want some particular strain of petunia. Buy only what is advertised as double; about 40 per cent will come double and the remainder will be good single.

All buyers of a few petunias in the month of May look for the double flowers and as an individual flower many of them are beautiful. But they don't begin to make as showy or nearly as satisfactory a bed as the single flowers; in fact, the double petunias are all right as a pot plant but for every other purpose the single is ahead.

Petunia is a very minute seed and must be carefully sown. Water the surface of soil in pot or pan before you sow and when the water has soaked in and the soil dry enough not to be sticky sow the seed and then with a clean piece of wood or bottom of a pot go over the surface with a slight pressure. This will put the little seeds into the soil and no more covering is needed. A damp cloth laid on the surface is all you want, but that must be removed directly the seed begins to germinate. The most critical time with these delicate seedlings is the first week of their young life. A severe dryness would be fatal to them, and if allowed to draw up spindling they would be about worthless and very apt to damp off; so watch them closely after they once show growth and see that they have light but not bright sun and no extremes of wet or dryness.

I have always considered the raising of many of our plants from seed as the most delicate, and needing a sort of watchful skill more than any of our other gardening operations, and what I have said about the common little petunia will apply more or less to all our small seeds.

Cannas.

If you grow many cannas it's about time to get them up and divide and clean, ready to start. When we knew less than we do now we used to pot the roots at once into 4-inch pots or whatever size they were to be grown, and sold few. That was a great waste of valuable space when it was of the greatest value and not by any means as good for the dormant roots as starting them in moss.

When you have cut up the roots into small pieces, leaving one good eye, which is enough, place them thick on an inch or so of sphagnum moss on a bench in some warm house. If the moss is damp, which of course it should be, the roots will soon put out a growth and they can remain on this bed of sphagnum for several weeks before being potted, and when they are potted they have such active root growth that they start right off. Another advantage is that from one cause or another a small percentage may not start at all; in that case you have not wasted either space or material.

The canna is bound to be as popular the coming year as it has been in the immediate past. It is a grand and beautiful plant and flower, and seems perfectly adapted to our climate. A bed of scarlet geraniums may be all right in its place, but the eye tires of them quickly and turns with pleasure and relief to the luxurious green or bronze of the tropical leaves, whose flowers, however brilliant in color, are never overpowering in quantity, but always relieved by its tropical foliage.

You may not be able to afford the purchase of quantities of the newer varieties, but you should certainly buy a dozen or two of them now and plant out for your own stock. Black Beauty gives no flower, but it is incomparably the finest of its class for sub-tropical gardening; McKinley is a splendid, bright scarlet with green foliage; Tarrytown is the greatest bloomer of all, a splendid spike of dark scarlet and a dwarf, compact grower; it is indispensable; Kate Gray is a tall, gorgeous grower with a grand flower; Souvenir de Antoine Crozy is the best of its class. Of the newer varieties, David Harum is a beautiful orange-scarlet with bronze foliage; Buttercup is a pure yellow of the Florence Vaughan type. J. C. Vaughan last year had a large bed at the Pan-American which he called Dwarf Florence Vaughan; it was a most constant and prolific bloomer and a decided improvement. But I would like to have more to say about cannas at some future date.

INJEANNY.

(Response by Mr. J. A. E. Haugh to the toast "Indiana" at the banquet to the American Carnation Society at Indianapolis.)

Some folks say Injeanny is small taters in the bill,
I argy, that sech silly talk comes only from ill will.
Ef 'stead of throwin' mud at us, they'd stop an' 'vestigate,
They'd purty soon make change of tune, want us fer runnin' mate.

Some say we air so small. So's dimuns. Surely you'll admit
To swap one fer a load of hay, would show but leetle wit.
Most oft you'll find the melon that's the larges' in the store,
Has, where the sweetes' part should be, jes' a big holler core.

An' jes' to show the reasons why us Hoosurs air so sure,
That our's about the only state, I'll now upon this floor
Give you some fac's to think about, an' then I bet you'll say,
Ef you could only pull up stakes, you'd come right here an' stay.

A fertile sile on ev'ry side, yields bounteous craps each fall,
An' happear homes cannot be foun' on this tureschual ball.
Each kounty seat's a huslin' town, with fac-t'rys rushed pellmell;
And not a spot but you can hear a janglin' enjine bell.

An' we air proud as proud can be of many a fav'rite son,
Whose made by some great deed, a name good nuff for anyone.
An' Morton, Colfax, Hendericks, air honored o'er the lan',
But first of all is Harrison in this immortal ban'.

Jes' give Jim Riley pen an' ink an' set him down to write,
True nater's pitcher then you'll see put down in black an' white.
You'll smell the blossoms' fragrance, see the ruslin' of the pines,
An' hear the bees a hummin' in the sprawlin' punkin' vines.

An' where's anuther Wallace, with a book like his Ben Hur?
A chap sets down to read it, by gum, he cannot stir.
Booth Tarkintun, an' Egglestun, air churist by all han's,
With Thompson, he who writ the book "Ole Alice of Vinsans."

To bring this balky dunky leetle nearer to his cart,
I'll tech now on a subjec' lying closes' to my heart;
That is, in raisin' posies, what air strictly up to date,
You'll hunt a long time 'fore you'll find the ekwill of this state.

Big Sandy Grau, our florist, sez, with one of his slow winks,

"A collige edycation which has shamed the good ole name."

Sez, "Right here in Injeanny an' nourished in our sile,
"Has 'riginated more than half that's made the florist pile;
"An' some air red, an' some air white, an' pink and striped too;
"With fragrunce like a clover fiel' all wet with mornin' dew."

"They don't call me an 'easy mark,' but he ken rope me in!

Why all us Hoosier folks do seem puffed up with sech a pride.
An' ef there is a feller won't admit now our renown
We'll ask him very kindly "to go 'way back an' set down."

PITTSBURG.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club was held in the Cut Flower Company's rooms, 504 Liberty street, on Thursday evening, 13th inst., a large attendance being present. It was election of officers night. All of the members nominated for office at the previous meeting were unanimously elected. Seven new members were elected, and six new names proposed for membership.

The committee appointed at the last meeting to look for a new meeting place, the present quarters being too small, reported on several places it had examined, and it was continued and given power to make the selection. Several members signified their intention of attending the Carnation Convention at Indianapolis next week.

The recent action of some members of the Board of Park Commissioners in the city of Buffalo in proposing to erect a bronze monument in the park to the memory of William McMillan, their late superintendent, was brought up and discussed. It was most gratifying news. No park man in America was ever more esteemed than William McMillan, his name was synonymous for unswerving honesty, sterling manhood and love for and devotion and application to his work. And the dismissal a few years ago of that noble, unyielding soul, is an everlasting blot on the name of Buffalo. And it was with heartfelt pleasure that the following words, spoken by retiring Park Commissioner Langdon, at the meeting of the board on the 28th ult., were read: "I feel as though I ought not to retire without an expression of praise and gratitude for the splendid work done by our late superintendent, William McMillan, in upbuilding the Buffalo park system. * * * To that man more than to any one individual Buffalo owes her present park system. The one act of my career as park commissioner that I bitterly regret is the vote that I cast to dismiss that competent official. * * * I believe that the insult that we then offered him materially hastened his death." The club then unanimously and most heartily voted to send its thanks to to Mr. Langdon and his coworkers for his manly expressions and their resolve to erect a monument in the park to America's greatest park superintendent.

The subject for discussion was "Greenhouse Building." Members Burki, Blind, Elliott, Murdock, Reineman, Heiron, Nelson and several others gave expression to their views. Mr. Fred Burki, who has recently built some very large rose houses, detailed his construction. He likes iron frame houses better than wooden ones, though their original cost is a third more, and he likes wide, high houses better than low, narrow ones; they are lighter, easier to heat and keep warm and plants grow better in them. He gets better roses in winter from a three-quarter span house than from a full span one, but the latter is better for summer, or all-the-year round work.

He uses selected, double strength B. Pittsburg glass, 16x24, lapping it 3-16 of an inch, bedding it in homemade putty, tacking it in place with Siebert's points and running thick white lead along the edges. His experience with butted glass has not been favorable. He has tile-lined and plank-lined benches; the tile-lined ones dry out much quicker than the wooden ones and the plants grow better on them and yield more roses, and he makes more money from them than from the other, hence the tile is the better and most profitable one.

Several of the greenhouse builders of the country sent in writing their views of what is best in this line, what to observe, to do and what not to do. Mr. Burnham, of the firm of Lord & Burnham, being sick, referred the club to his views as expressed in a very comprehensive illustrated article in Vol. II. of Bailey's Encyclopedia of Horticulture. It is worth reading.

Mr. J. D. Carmody, of Evansville, Ind., urged that no man should ever build a greenhouse on another man's land. And he sent a picture of the race horse he has placed at the disposal of any member who will visit him at Carnation Convention time.

Mr. DeForest, of Hitchings Company, advised building houses giving as much light as possible. Use every means to get rid of drip. Use a continuous iron gutter and never a galvanized iron one. The pitch of roof should be 7½ inches to the foot, never less than 6 inches. Lap the glass. Bed in best putty, and with small brush run thick white lead along the sash-bar edges of the glass. Have good double strength French or American glass, and carefully select the best panes for the roof, and any that show a defect put into the partitions and ends. Commercial houses now run 30 to 50 feet wide, and often 300 to 400 feet long. In this case the benches are all on the same level, a little narrower than formerly, with more frequent pathways between and always a pathway next the front and back of the house. Never use kiln dried cypress, but always air dried wood. In hot water heating 2-inch pipe is taking precedence over all other sizes, but there should be a valve on every floor and return run of pipe. And have duplicate boilers so valved that they can be run together or separately, and if need be, that one can be disconnected and removed without interfering with the proper working of the other. In ventilating use a continuous sash for each string of gearing and not several sashes to the same rod. While cast iron may be all right in contact with the ground and last for years, wrought iron should never touch the earth, else it will rust out in a few years; it should be set into a concrete base well above the soil; in fact so should all iron. Angle iron purlins 1¼x2 inches are better and cheaper than pipe. The regular sashbars are 1⅛x2¼ to 3 inches, depending upon the span.

The Lockland Lumber Company sent models of the parts and construction of their wooden houses. These were very interesting and freely handled and discussed in detail by the members. Mr. James Murdoch has houses, built ten years ago, of this same material and construction, and he said they appear to be as good to-day as when he first built them. But he keeps them well painted and the gutters tarred. They strongly advise clear, all-heart, air dried cypress, and urge against any white sapwood or kiln dried wood. For wooden houses they recommend square red cedar posts resting on a stone in the bottom of a deep post hole. Preference is given to double strength A glass, 16x24. Have considerable faith in butted glass. Instead of 20-ft. houses, 30, 36 and 40-ft. are now called for, and their opinion is in favor of full span rather than triple short-roof greenhouses.

Charlie Weathered wrote as follows: "The tendency now is, to build very wide houses—in some cases 52 feet. My opinion is, however, that they have now reached the limit, as any further increase would necessitate increasing the weight of the iron to carry the load, thus increasing the shade so as to be unbeneficial. Iron frame is far preferable to any other, being far lighter, much more durable and so little more expensive as to warrant their universal use. In all cases, use wrought iron fittings wherever possible for the reason that cast iron is so liable to break, frequently doing so in tightening up a bolt, and in many cases, in places unperceivable, and thus becomes very dangerous, the cast iron fittings also frequently breaking, through the settling of the house. With wrought iron fittings, this is impossible.

Don't spare expense in foundations. Get a solid foundation, whether of brick, stone or cement. It is false economy to put a good house on a bad foundation. This refers as much to supports for columns and benches as to support of main framework. Use cypress, but be sure it is good. In all cases, get air dried; kiln drying rots the lumber and is worse than useless. I firmly believe where houses have not brick foundations and one of iron framework in using the rafter, for the post, or rather in making a continuous rafter from foundation base to ridge. The rafter being set in cement cannot corrode, and being in one piece cannot break as it is very liable to where a cast iron post is used (they usually breaking at the joint) and the house is supported only by the bolts connecting the cast iron post to the wrought iron rafter. A wrought iron angle bar at the eaves is excellent, giving added strength to the house, but when used as an eaves plate, and the glass meets the iron, the expansion and contraction is bound to break the glass, thus entailing a continuous expense every year. In some cases, this is minimized by putting a six-inch strip of glass at the eaves; still it is costly, not only in the cost of the glass, but the labor in replacing.

"I should advise in all cases where iron benches are used, to have them galvanized. Do not for one moment believe in a non-freezable gutter. Such a thing is a myth, excepting in non-freezable climates. Never use either an iron or wooden gutter, except where it is compulsory, as everyone must admit that they give added shade to the houses and are certainly not ornamental."

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The first of Lent has not brought any decline in prices. St. Valentine's day was a busy day; many fine flowers of all kinds were used. This week's business opened to the accompaniment of the heaviest snow storm of the season, shortening up the supply and delaying shipments.

Beauties are scarce. When obtainable, it is not easy to get just the grade wanted. Prices range from $2 to $5 per dozen for good stuff; $6 to $8 per dozen for specials. Fancy Brides and Maids still bring $15 per 100; good stock, $10 to $12; the poorest are worth $4 to $5; some fine Liberties bring $6 per dozen.; they are very fine. Carnations are superb; $3 to $4 buys choice flowers; a few Lawsons bring as high as $8; ordinary grades, $1 to $2. Violets are also fine; 75 cents to $1 per 100 is top price for doubles; 40 to 50 cents per 100 for singles. Mignonette brings $2 to $4. Asparagus, 35 to 50 cents per bunch or string; smilax, 12½ to 15 cents per string; adiantums, 75 cents to $1 per 100 sprays. Valley is only going fairly well at $3 to $4 per 100; daffodils, ditto. Tulips go slowly, some lots not bringing enough to cover cost. This refers to common stock; choice, well-grown stock is in demand; prices range from $2 to $3 for the former; the latter bring $4 to $6. Freesia is less plentiful; $2 to $4 is about the price. Sweet peas are more plentiful; $1.50 to $2 per 100 buys good blooms. Lilacs bring $1 to $1.50 a bunch of 12 blooms.

Various Notes.

David Cliffe has a novelty in the shape of English wall flowers. George M. Moss handles these and they are in demand.

Leo Niessen's place of business was closed on Tuesday owing to the death of Mr. Niessen's father.

David Anderson of Garrettsford will grow a large house of Kaiserin for next summer.

John Burton has a cooling room built in the most up-to-date style on his new place.

George W. Kibblehouse of Ambler, Pa., died last month, leaving three greenhouses to his widow. Mrs. Kibblehouse understands her late husband's business and will carry it on herself. A year, when he was ill, she kept the carnations in shape and got all the spring plants ready for the bedding season.

It is stated that Adolph Fahrenwald of Hill-side will grow more Liberties next season. This is of interest, as Mr. Fahrenwald has been regarded as a Beauty specialist in the past.

Edward Reid is receiving some very fine Brides and Maids. His stock of carnations is always a feature.

The H. A. Dreer Co. has noticed a decided increase in the demand for variegated plants.

Samuel S. Pennock is receiving a lot of particularly fragrant double violets; 5,000 each day.

The Florists' Bowling Team downed Pencoyd three straight games, giving them a score of 14 out of 15 games played in the present tournament.

CARNATIONS.

I notice in the inquiry of M. H., and answer by Mr. Baur, that I seem to advocate the removal of all soil from roots before benching carnations. I do most certainly favor removing all field soil, but as stated in my paper, the object in potting each cutting is to have a base at time of lifting. Of course it is a small one with roots running out in all directions and with large plants these roots are often of quite good length, but the ball will be there if handled rightly.

This year I intend to shift a number of the earlier stock cuttings to 3-inch, in which case the ball will be larger at lifting time, necessitating a trifle deeper hole when benching, also the small hill in center of hole must, obviously, be lower down. I wish to emphasize the fact that the cutting must be well established in the pot, whatever the size, before transplanting to flats or bench. Upon this depends the success of the whole operation and the reason for doing same.

I think my method may have been misunderstood in explaining the operation of planting at housing time. The hill in center of hole, it must be said, is not to be packed very solidly, its only object being to facilitate arranging the roots to radiate out and downward instead of hanging down like a hair switch. No doubt I should have said "a small hill rising to within an inch or two of soil level," as the case might be, for some varieties have a longer stem than others at the base of plant.

CARNATIONS REGISTERED.

Registered by the Chicago Carnation Company, Joliet, Ill.: "Her Majesty," originated with us and grown four seasons as No. 56. Flowers purest ivory white (remarkably so), very large and uniform, at no time even in midwinter measuring less than three inches in diameter, beautiful form, calyx never did burst, stems strong, from 24 to 28 inches long. As a producer it has no equal, destined to become the white for summer cutting as it produces freely and evenly from July 1 to same date the following year.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business for the past week was very satisfactory and quite up to the average of this time of year. Stock in all lines, save bulbous, was on the short side and prices were held correspondingly high. Good Brides, Maids and Meteors readily sold from 6 to 8 cents, with medium grade 4 to 5 cents. There are so few really good Beauties in this market that it is really hardly worth while to quote prices on them. Some short-stemmed ones are to be seen and sell for 50 cents to $1.50 per dozen. The few Liberties that come in are sold at sight at 4 to 6 cents for medium stems and 10 to 12 cents for best stock.

Carnations are still in fairly good supply, but there are none to spare of the good and fancy grades. They bring from 1½ to 2 cents for ordinary grade and 3 to 4 cents for fancy.

Good white tulips are a trifle scarce, but there is a large supply of other kinds of bulbous stock. Tulips in all colors bring 4 cents; Von Sions, 3 to 4 cents; Romans, 2 to 3 cents; paper white narcissus, 3 cents; daffodils, 3 cents; white Dutch hyacinths, 4 cents, Harrisii lilies, 15 cents; callas, 10 to 12½ cents.

Violets, both single and donble, sell well but at rather low prices, 50 cents per 100 being about the average for good stock.

St. Valentine's day proved to be first-class from a florist's viewpoint. Red flowers took the lead, and everything in tulips, roses and carnations of a red color sold out fast and for good prices.

Notes.

A recent visit to Walter Gray's establishment on College Hill showed stock in very good shape. A house of calla lilies was the chief attraction and it was truly a sight to see. The house is built especially for callas and is almost square. One large bench occupies the entire center and here are planted the callas. Mr. Gray also forces large quantities of Romans and narcissus. The greater portion of the place is devoted to rose growing. They are planted in solid beds and some of the plants are 14 years old. I neglected to mention that Mr. Gray grows over 5,000 callas for cut purposes.

I went out to see Dick Witterstaetter's place and found everything in shape for the carnation meeting. I was especially impressed with his new white seedling No. 723A. This carnation is truly a good one. We need a first-class fancy white and need it badly and I believe that this one will be it. Adonis and Enquirer are doing nicely, and a house of seedlings contains many of great promise.

W. K. Partridge had about 3,000 selected carnations in his cellar for the Indianapolis meeting.

Miss Cooper, of the Fair, is again attending to business after several days' illness.

Our visitors this week were: H. M. Altick, Dayton, Ohio; Mr. B. Eschner and M. Reukauf, Philadelphia; E. Asmus, West Hoboken, N. J.; P. M. Pierson, C. W. Ward, E. Dailledouze, New York; Mr. McMahon, Seabright, N. J.; Messrs. Graham, Hart and several others from Cleveland; William Gravett, Lancaster, Ohio; J. D. Imlay, Zanesville, Ohio. C. J. Ohmer.

Trade Conditions for Feb. 10-15.

The week started off with something of a scarcity in everything except all kinds of bulb goods; but towards the end of it old Father Time came out in his new spring suit and all nature woke up to greet the old gentleman. All the greenhouse plants put on their best colors, but the sordid-minded growers ruthlessly cut them off and boxed them to market, so the week closed with everything plentiful except smallest grade of all kinds of roses and all sizes of red ones.

Prices of last week were maintained, but better goods were given for the price, which condition probably will continue for a week or so yet until the permanency of the weather is decided.

Various Items.

The firm of Ingram & Lynes, of Reading, Mass., has dissolved. They grew a stock of carnations and violets which will be maintained by Mr. James Ingram.

A correspondent writes to ask how he can dispose of a small stock of plants in Boston. This is a common question from small growers at this time of year and it would seem to be easy for one well known to the city trade to place such lots where so many are being sold every day. My experience with plants is after the "hens teeth" order; but the chief obstacle here is the fact that a fair-minded buyer is fair-minded enough to stick to the growers who have supplied him all along, and the other kind of a buyer offers so low a price he gives you your first attack of that "tired feeling."

Too generally, the smaller grower cannot compete in quality with the larger and the latter by daily contact with the city knows just who is most in need of the goods. And no one will purchase the goods without seeing them. Presumably there is a show among the auction sales a little later but here again the competition of the larger grower is felt.

Another man writes he thinks he will have to send me a dollar for a year's subscription to the Review, so he will not have to ask so many questions.

ST. LOUIS.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Club was held last Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. This being our annual carnation meeting, quite a few new faces were seen, and when President Meinhardt called the meeting to order there were thirty-four persons present. The exhibition of carnations was not so large as last year. Among the outside florists who exhibited were: R. Witterstaetter, of Cincinnati, who sent his grand pink Enquirer and the Red Estelle, which were much admired; the E. G. Hill Co. sent a fine vase of new pink Cressbrook, and everybody says that in this variety Mr. Warburton has a fine pink which speaks for itself; the Chicago Carnation Co. sent their fine, shell-pink Mrs. Higinbotham, Mrs. Palmer, an excellent red, and Chicot, an extra large, fine white striped.

A fine lot of the new scarlet Challenger, sent by William Hoffman, of Pawtucket, R. I., came too late for exhibition. When seen at Kuehn's they were in excellent condition.

Among the local growers who exhibited were: Will Rucke, of Belleville, who showed a fine vase of Lawson; J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, a grand vase of White Cloud and a vase of Weber's Genevieve Lord; J. W. Dunford (better known as the St. Louis Carnation Co.), of Central, a vase of well-grown mixed carnations; Fillmore, Jablonsky and Tesson each showed a vase of mixed standard varieties. The judges, Messrs. Weber, Herzog and Koenig, reported that all were worthy of mention.

The World's Fair matter was laid over until the next meeting of the club. It was also decided by the members that we would not have a show this fall.

Mr. William Poltz, a young member of the club, was given a scholarship to the Missouri Botanical Garden, which is in accordance with the will of the late Henry Shaw.

Mr. J. W. Dunford, of the St. Louis Carnation Co., read an essay on growing carnations, which was very interesting.

The next meeting of the club, which will be held on Thursday afternoon, March 13, at 3 o'clock, will be the annual rose show, and two essays will be read on this occasion, one by Mr. Fillmore, on "Growing Roses," and one by J. F. Ammann, on "American Beauties."

The following from out of town were seen during the meeting: Miss Krug, of Alton, Ill.; J. F. Ammann and Henry Blixen, of Edwardsville, Ill.; John Stiedle and J. W. Dunford, of Central, Mo.; Henry Emundt and "Bill" Rucke, of Belleville, Ill., and Henry Johann, of Collinsville, Ill.

The Market.

The cut flower trade is not so brisk as one would think to see the rush for cut flowers at the wholesale market each morning. This rush is due to the scarcity of stock and all wishing to stock up for the day's business. The West End florists claim that trade was very good on St. Valentine's day. The call was for Beauties and violets, but the supply of these was limited. But things will soon be different, a week or two ol this clear weather will almost cause a glut.

Good first grades in roses bring from $6 to $10 at this writing; Perles are very scarce; Beauties sell from $3 to $6 per dozen for firsts; shorts from $4 to $10 per 100. All kinds of roses are in good demand.

Carnations are quite plentiful, and will be from now on, but none are going to waste. Fancies sell from $2 to $4 and all varieties sell well, especially white; of the latter there is not enough coming in to supply the demand.

Valley is fine now at $4; some second grades go at $2 and $3; Romans go well at from $2 to $3; paper whites, $3; Dutch hyacinths, $3 and $4; daffodils, double and single, $2 and $4; the tulips which are coming in are very fine, but are not selling any too well at from $2 to $3 per 100; callas, $8 and $10; Harrisiis are now more plentiful at $12.50 and $15.

Violets, Californias, 75 cents and $1; small singles, 25 and 35 cents; doubles from 50 cents to $1.50 per 100. Smilax is not scarce and is selling well at $12.50 per 100 strings.

Notes.

Max Herzog has a new patent self-feeder and smoke consumer combined which will be shown at one of the club meetings in the near future.

F. W. Pape, general superintendent of public parks, left last Wednesday for Detroit, Chicago and other cities in the northwest, to make a study of transplanting large trees.

It is the intention of Park Commissioner Ridgely to utilize all the giant trees on the World's Fair site that the exposition landscape architects decide to remove, and they will be placed in Forest Park and other public recreation grounds which come under his management.

Bowling.

The Florists won two games from the Libertys last week. Mr. John Sturtz, one of our best men, is out of the game with a very bad thumb on his bowling hand. Should he be out of the game until the end of the season the championship is lost.

The following scores were made last Thursday night:

OMAHA.

Valentine's day brought its usual increase in sales to all florists and violets were in good demand. The past few days of dull weather has cut the crop of roses short, especially Beauties; carnations are also somewhat short cropped.

William Clark, of Colorado Springs, was here visiting with the Omaha florists while on his way to Indianapolis.

Nebraska Florists' Society Meeting.

The Nebraska Florists' Society met in monthly session in the park commissioners' rooms last evening. There was a good attendance.

It was decided to hold a bowling tournament February 27 at the Vienna alleys, which have been refitted with new fixtures throughout. Refreshments will be served, and all are looking forward to a good time.

Mr. Lewis Henderson read a report of the Nebraska State Horticultural Society's meeting, to which he was a delegate from the Florists' Society. There were many salient points brought out in this report, viz., the damping off question, which was discussed, also City Forestry, and exception was taken to the name. This latter paper was read before the State Horticultural Society by Secretary Goodman, of the Missouri Horticultural Society. Mr. C. S. Harrison's paper, "A Mission of Beauty," received its share of praise, and all were enthusiastic in working for the advancement of floriculture in our cities and towns.

Mr. W. R. Adams, superintendent of parks, will deliver an address on "The Improvement of City Plantings" at the next monthly meeting, March 13; a paper on "Western Horticulture" will be given by J. H. Hadkinson. There surely is an increased interest in the society's doings.

Bowling.

After adjourning the members tried their skill on the Gate City alleys. Scores were as follows:

SOUTHSIDERS.
J. H. Hadkinson	146	170
John Bath	126	171
S. B. Faulkner	102	121
Lewis Henderson	142	120

Newark, N. Y.—Mr. C. H. Perkins, of Jackson & Perkins Company, accompanied by his wife, is spending about two months in California. Messrs. Jackson & Perkins Company have extensive branch nurseries at Orange, Cal., where they are growing rose bushes in large quantities. Mr. Perkins is also extensively interested in the handling of California products, such as raisins, oranges, honey, prunes, apricots, etc.

ROSE CUTTINGS.

J. M. sends some rose cuttings and wishes to know what is the trouble with them?

The specimens were in such a dry and shriveled condition when they arrived that the leaves were useless for the purpose of examination. So far as I could see there was no perceptible signs of disease.

The trouble arose from using very strong and unripened flower stems for cuttings. Cuttings made from this kind of wood will form large callosites and some roots, but the eyes are deficient in vitality, and the first leaves usually drop before they are fully expanded. Try smaller and better ripened wood. Ribes.

STEM-ROT.

I see L. G. asks for a remedy for stem rot. I have found the following effective. I place about half a teaspoonful of dry Louisville cement close around the stem of each plant where it comes in contact with the soil. If there is any manure around the stem that is pushed away first. Then if Mr. Baur's instructions in regard to watering in a trench between the rows and airing are followed he will soon be rid of the stem rot. Probably the nature of the soil as well as the weather has a great deal to do with stem rot, as we see expert growers troubled with it year after year. The remedy mentioned has been a complete success with me.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.

Ivera writes us that he deeply regrets that circumstances prevented him from writing for the Retail Florist for some time, but that he will resume the department again next week with an article on "Carnations from the Retailers' Standpoint."

Rockford, Ill.—Mr. H. W. Buckbee met with a serious accident last week. He fell into an elevator well in his building, falling one story and breaking a leg and an arm. At last report he was doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances.

STEAM HEATING.

Referring to the inquiry of "Subscriber," I would strongly advise the use of low pressure steam as being the best medium for the heating of a range of commercial greenhouses, it being effective to the most perfect degree, economical in fuel and installation and easily cared for by any ordinary intelligent workman. The high pressure system is more complex in its construction and it requires considerable more care and judgment in operation with no economic advantages.

The grading of the pipes may be the same either in the high or low pressure system. Where it is practicable, the best plan is to rise up to a high point with the steam main, having all pipes grade back toward the main return or to the boiler. In this manner, you will insure comparatively dry steam starting off on the circuit.

REVIEW OF THE EXHIBITION AT INDIANAPOLIS.

The exhibition of carnations held in connection with the eleventh annual meeting of the American Carnation Society was undoubtedly the finest exhibition of carnations ever held, not only in this country, but in the world. Never before were as many extra fine blooms staged at one time in spite of the fact that many thousands of blooms were delayed on the way too long to be in condition for staging on their arrival. All the trains from the east were several hours late and none of the exhibits arrived in time for competition, the time limit of which was set for 1 p. m. Wednesday. The Boston shipments were held at Cleveland, Ohio, for sixteen hours, while C. W. Ward's shipments did not arrive until Thursday, which made it of little use staging them. It was very unfortunate, indeed, as most of the consignments contained new varieties which we were all very anxious to see, and this was the only opportunity most of us are likely to have to see them. Those who were fortunate enough to see them within a short time after they were unpacked were able to form an opinion of their worth, but after being packed so long the warm air of the exhibition hall soon put them to sleep.

Among the late comers were some grand blooms of Peter Fisher's Gov. Wolcott, which certainly seems to be a fine white. Enchantress, a fine Daybreak colored variety, and Mrs. W. A. Patten, a white variegated variety. Mr. C. Warburton's Cressbrook was on the same train, but fortunately for him the E. G. Hill Company had brought over a large vase full of magnificent blooms. Another bunch of Fair Maid, from Mr. A. Roper, of Tewksbury Center, Mass., looked fine for an hour or two, but the long journey was too much for it and it soon developed a bad case of that tired feeling. We were sorry that Mr. Ward did not set up a few of his new ones as it would have given most of the growers a glimpse of their color and form at least.

The Chicago Carnation Company's shipment arrived too late for competition on account of missing a train while being transferred by the express company. They put up a few vases of their new ones, though, among which were bunches of about 100 each of Mrs. Potter Palmer, a grand soft scarlet bloom of good size and substance; Mrs. Higinbotham, a fair sized bloom of a beautiful shade of light salmon, and about fifty blooms of Marshall Field, a white variegated of large size and good form; also a large bunch of a fine white, of which I was unable to learn the name. All of these had fine stems, nearly three feet long, and showed unusually good cultivation.

Among the seedlings were the following varieties of merit: A large bunch of No. 99, a deep salmon, shown by E. Buettner, of Park Ridge, Ill.; "Daybreak Perfection," which looked like a giant Daybreak, by Boehringer Bros., Bay City, Mich.; "Oriole," a pretty, fair sized red bloom, by J. B. Goetz, of Saginaw, Mich. R. Witterstaetter, of Sedamsville, Ohio, showed a white of unusual merit, numbered 723 A, and if it produces enough blooms to the plant it will surely be a winner. His Enquirer was also very fine indeed. E. T. Graves showed a fine bunch of Camelliaflora, another fine, large white of high quality and purity of color.

F. Dorner & Sons Company had their four new ones in fine shape, besides a large number of smaller bunches of unnamed seedlings which made a fine show, and crowds were collected there continually admiring the odd and also fine shades of color and the large size of some of the blooms. Theirs was easily the prettiest display in the hall. The E. G. Hill Company set up a vase of 100 blooms of that grand scarlet, Adonis, which looks fine every time I see it, and, by the way, it captured the Lawson gold medal, which was the very highest honor to be striven for in the whole exhibition. Their vase of Gaiety looked grand and was admired by all on account of its fine, clear marking and good stems. Their vase of Cressbrook easily ranked with Lawson and Enquirer.

Every visitor from out of town was anxious to have a peep at the Mrs. E. A. Nelson, and they had an opportunity to feast their eyes on a bunch of fifty magnificent blooms. Uncle John Thorpe pronounced it one of the finest ever produced, and he was not far from right. John Hartje and Baur & Smith each had on exhibition a number of seedlings in their second year and many of them were very favorably commented on. Next year will show more of their worth.

I forgot to mention among the late comers Mr. Marquisee's Empire State, a white of unusual purity, fine stem, good calyx and large bloom, resembling Marquis in form. This looks like a great acquisition.

There was perhaps no variety shown more extensively that Mrs. Lawson, of which there were several vases of fine blooms, and it carried off nearly all the premiums in its class. The large vases shown by Bassett & Washburn and by H. W. Buckbee were very fine indeed. Prosperity was also very much in evidence and all were fine blooms, but it is too bad the stem is not a trifle stronger. In red, Estelle was most extensively shown, and it captured most of the premiums, except in the class for 100 scarlet, which was won by a magnificent vase of Chicago shown by Bassett & Washburn. They were the finest blooms of that variety that I have ever seen.

In white Norway took the best premium and a fine vase it was, by H. Weber & Son. E. G. Hill's Lorna was very fine also, as was also a vase of White Cloud. Mrs. Bradt was the leading standard variegated. A very fine vase of Gov. Roosevelt, by E. G. Hill, looked very fine. There were a few vases of Ethel Crocker which were very fine and I was glad to see that it does well with some grow-

Golden Beauty, shown by the E. G. Hill Company. E. T. Grave showed a vase of 100 very fine blooms of Dorothy, and the E. G. Hill Company had a bunch of fifty fine blooms. H. Weber & Son put up a vase of 100 Genevieve Lord, which had a much better color than I had ever seen before. We were glad to see a vase full of our old friend and standby, Flora Hill, and it was as good as any only the stems were a little shorter than the winners.

There were two vases of Princess of Wales violets which were the finest I ever saw; they came from William Sim, Cliftondale, Mass. J. G. Heinl, of Terre Haute, sent a fine bunch of white lilac.

All the Indianapolis boys were proud of the show and the general satisfaction expressed by all with the accommodations, and feel well repaid for their work during the past year in connection with the convention and exhibition. Our most sanguine hopes were fully realized and now we hope that the next show will excel this one as much as this one excelled all former exhibitions.

tion Co. and several others had received their flowers in time to compete, the exhibition would have been far ahead both in quantity and quality of any previous similar occasion. The snow storm which visited New York City and neighborhood will not account for the many vexatious delays, and every effort should be made that this should not occur again.

It gives you the headache (if at all subject to it) pondering on what are the best varieties to grow, and new aspirants come along in such numbers that we get bewildered. There is one thing sure and it is sound advice. If you are growing any variety with success and find it profitable don't discard it for an apparently larger flower till you have proven that you can grow the new one. In the standard varieties there were some grand vases. Still the judges in their wisdom saw fit to withhold the first prize to some very fine flowers. In the scoring for certificates we should be most conservative, as the careless award of a certificate may mislead many, but in competition it is entirely different and the prize is given simply "for the ers as well as with ourselves. Our own vase of Elma was very much admired, but not near as much as was the bunch of plants growing at our greenhouses. Stuart & Haugh showed a nice vase of their Avondale.

Gunnar Teilmann put up a nice vase of fifty Crane, which was the only vase of that variety shown, besides the one in Bassett & Washburn's collection, which was by far the best collection of blooms of standard varieties in the hall. The varieties were Prosperity, Chicago, Mrs. Bradt, Marquis, Gold Nugget, Lorna, Lawson, Maceo, Norway, White Cloud, Crane, Morning Glory, Flora Hill and Mrs. James Dean.

W. K. Partridge's collection, which captured the Proctor vase, contained the following varieties: Norway, Chicago, E. Crocker, Mrs. Joost, Melba, Crane, Prosperity, Roosevelt, America, W. Cloud, Dorothy, Gomez and Mrs. Bradt. H. W. Buckbee showed good vases of America and Jubilee, besides his fine vase of Lawson. William Nicholson showed a nice vase of Eldorado, which looked quite up-to-date, but the prettiest yellow in the hall was a vase of

There are many fine new varieties now in their second and third year that will in time displace all the leaders of today, and the grower who wishes to stay at the front must purchase them as they are introduced, just as he has done in the past. That there is much room for improvement could be seen on all sides and not a variety in the hall but could be improved in some way, although the specimens shown were the most perfect ever shown of their kind. We want an Enquirer bloom that does not burst its calyx. We want an Alba bloom on a Lorna stem. We want an America with the color of Adonis, and so on down the list until the whole carnation family is completely revolutionized. Yes, it will come some day, but it will take lots of hard work and practice.

A. F. J. Baur.

Other pens more official than mine have given you a list of the varieties shown and the result of the competitions for premiums at Indianapolis. It was a grand display and if Messrs. Fisher, Marquisee, Ward, The Chicago Carna-best," which means the best exhibited in competition with other exhibits in that class, and in my opinion only when the exhibit is very indifferent should the premium be withheld. If this is going to be the practice it will scare off many would be exhibitors. I noticed scarcely an exhibit on the tables but what was worthy of a prize had there not been better pitted against them.

Norway and Lorna showed up fine. It seems Lorna will surely displace White Cloud; it is grand in every way. Camelliaflora is another fine white. Mr. Hartshorne's seedling 101 is also a very fine white and received a certificate. In pink the vase of Enquirer was in appearance perfection, but can anyone but Mr. Witterstaetter grow it? And then he needs the services of a man milliner to fix up the flowers. Cressbrook did not show up quite as finely as at Baltimore. Ethel Crocker was in good form but there are others. There was a fine vase of Nelson, but we have seen better flowers of this variety. It is a good one and I believe will find a place with all growers. Dorothy was in fine form; although it may not be considered the most aristocratic flower, everyone agrees that it is most profitable.

Morning Glory is a gem. Since leaving the convention I have seen a house of it that convinces me that it is one of the best all around carnations ever raised. Nothing new to be said about Lawson; it is in a class by itself, either on the table or growing. No comment is needed about Adonis. The vase of 100 blooms was, I think, the finest lot of carnations ever exhibited. Estelle showed up well and Mrs. Potter Palmer is a grand one, a perfect formed flower of the brighest scarlet. I forgot among the pinks to mention Mrs. Higinbotham, a most beautiful Daybreak pink with fine stems. This variety is bound to become a standard. Roosevelt was in its usual grand form, but if Mr. Ward's flowers had reached there we would probably have seen it eclipsed.

Mr. Marquisee's big white, The Empire State, is a wonder. When unpacked they were a revelation, but the long journey told on them. It's a great, large, pure white flower. I would liked to have seen a better vase of Golden Beauty, for all admit that is a grand, healthy yellow and anyone can grow it. The variegated Gaiety is a beauty and with most growers will displace Bradt, but if we could all grow Bradt as Bassett & Washburn showed it we would stick to it.

Peter Fisher's Gov. Wolcott is a beautiful white, but it suffered from the journey. As P. F. is the author of the immortal Lawson we have great faith in Wolcott. Among old varieties don't forget Glacier. It is one of the very best whites and some grand flowers of it were shown. I have missed many varieties, I know, but the above impressed me as the best.

And let me in conclusion sincerely thank the Indianapolis men for the splendid way they managed the whole affair and their unstinted hospitality. It was an all around howling success. The meeting room, exhibition hall and all accessories, were simply ideal! Never yet did we have such a place for the convention. But even if those conditions had been less favorable the wholesouled welcome of the Hoosier boys would have made this a convention never to be forgotten.

CARNATION CROPS.

What is a fair average cut per month from 1,000 carnation plants of a prolific standard variety? The cut for the following months is desired: November, December, January, February, March and April. Also the varieties upon which estimate is based if possible.

S. M. B.

The inquiry can only be answered accurately by some one who has kept a record of the blooms cut from his plants during an entire season. We have never done this and I can only say what I would judge a fair average from the experience that comes to every grower in the course of a number of years of growing and cutting carnation blooms.

The six months mentioned include practically the entire carnation season for many of our best varieties, although we have several varieties that will come into bloom in September and keep it up until the next July. These later mentioned varieties are usually the most constant bloomers and can be better depended on for a certain quantity of blooms each month than the others, which usually come on with a big crop of buds, and when they are cut there are no more until another crop comes on.

The number of blooms a plant will produce in a season depends on many conditions in its existence from the time it is a cutting until the end of the blooming season. A cutting that is struck in December and kept growing in a good healthy condition will produce more blooms than a later cutting can produce under the same conditions. So the question perhaps is how many blooms must you get from 1,000 plants to make them profitable to the grower. This again will vary with different varieties, as the blooms of one variety will probably bring double the price of another and it would be unfair to expect as many blooms per plant from the high priced variety as you would from the other.

There are, however, few varieties that will not be found profitable if each plant will produce on an average twenty blooms during the season and most of the varieties we have today will produce that many or more good blooms to the plant, or 20,000 blooms in a season from 1,000 plants. It is a well known fact that the cut will not be any ways near the same during each month, and it would be impossible to say how these figures should be divided between the six months. For instance, White Cloud produces the largest number of blooms during January and February, and I can safely say that we cut as many during these two months as we do during the other four. Ethel Crocker produces well all winter and then winds up in April and May with an enormous crop.

Mrs. Lawson seems to be the steadiest of the three, but the quality varies more, especially the stem. Mrs. Joost produces about like Crocker, only it comes in much earlier in the fall and it is very steady all winter. Jubilee usually gives us a crop about the holidays and then another late in February and March. America is best from December on, while Crane seems to be fine in the fall and fair all winter. Mrs. Bradt comes in about November and continues good until warm weather sets in but it must be propagated early and kept growing in order to get plants that will produce twenty blooms in its season. Flora Hill throws more and better blooms during September, October, November, March, April and May than it does during December, January and February.

Mr. B. must learn the varieties separately and then judge for himself, not merely which variety produces the most blooms, but which variety earns him the most money per square foot of bench space, as the quality of one variety may easily offset the quantity produced by another.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.

Carnations.

The divine flower is the chief topic of the hour among the greater portion of the florists of this continent. The annual meeting and exhibition held at Indianapolis last week will (as every annual meeting has done) result in great good to the popularity of the carnation. In many sections now it runs a close second to the rose, and therefore can be considered as the second most important commercial flower in the United States. In this sense it deserves serious consideration. The great trouble lies in the fact that the retailer's ideas and endeavors devoted to increasing its popularity among the flower-buying public are sadly hampered by the grower's estimate of its value. The present season has so far been a most remarkable one for carnations; unprecedentedly high prices have been the rule. True, a certain percentage of the flowers have been the best ever sent to the market, and yet on the other hand a vast quantity have been a total loss to many retailers.

It is not our desire to criticise varieties or methods of culture, but only to look at the flowers from a retailer's standpoint. It matters not how fine your flowers may appear on your plants in your greenhouses, it is their value and attractiveness on our counter that concerns us most. During this season more than any other it has been our experience that a great number of carnations have kept very badly. Various reasons have been assigned for their early proneness to sleep, such as damp weather, etc., etc., but to our mind it depends on growers' methods of gathering and storage more than aught else. Though it must be admitted that there is a varietal weakness, still it is an every day occurrence in all parts of the country that one man's blooms of the same variety will last twice as long as the others. On many occasions there is an unwise haste to send in undeveloped flowers without their even having been put in water, and then again others keep them until they are in the last stage, with the result that there is much trouble and loss to the buyer and harm to the future of the variety.

Carnations are not bought for their beauty alone, but for their supposed lasting quality. It should be remembered that the retail florist business is most of all a daily haphazard investment in very perishable stock, and the public are becoming more critical and harder to please all the time. These facts render it imperative that the carnation specialists, and even small growers, give more attention to the keeping qualities of their product and that retailers study well and try to provide themselves with proper facilities for display and preserving. Carnations are very susceptible to surroundings, easy to choke in a warm room or poorly cooled box; they will not stand excessive dampness and to shove a great bunch into a narrow, half water-filled vase means short life to them.

Unlike some flowers, size will never be able to detract from the beauty of carnations, rather the other way. There will always be an appreciative demand for the largest blooms obtainable, and consequently financial recompense and fame to be attained thereby will always insure a fair supply, but there are many ways to consider the carnation as a commercial flower. There appears to be an all-consuming tendency on the part of all growers to devote their entire efforts for size. The present types tend towards few flowers and higher prices, which is very good in a limited way, particularly with regards to large cities and elite trade, but it might be good to remember that there always was and always will be a very much larger demand for good average flowers at a moderate price. The man who produces quantity of fair sized blooms does more good to himself and the world than he who brings forth the large and the few. More attention should be given to the production of varieties that will be productive all the year around. The time will undoubtedly come when these flowers will be supplied as they are now sought in quality and quantity at all times.

Many of the largest carnations grown today are failures considered from an ideal standpoint. Size, form and color are important factors to the success of any flower, but there is a growing demand for fragrance, too. Sweetness and beauty are twin values in most flowers, and there is keen disappointment where one exists without the other. The day may shortly come when in general as in very many instances now, size will be subservient to color and fragrance.

Speaking of color, brings forth many important points. Judging the values of color from a commercial point of view, they may be placed in the following order: Medium pink, dark pink, white, light pink, variegated, scarlet, crimson and yellow. From an artistic standpoint we would change them to light pink, crimson, scarlet, dark pink, yellow, white and variegated. There are several other important points to consider color from; each of them, however, depends on circumstances or surroundings. There is perhaps a generally effective one where pink and scarlet are the two principal claimants, between which it is sometimes difficult to choose. With one or two exceptions the variegated or striped varieties in cultivation today are not capable of supplying the color tone or effectiveness required in the floral art of the period. Many growers are shipping colors and varieties into the markets at present which retailers are often compelled to buy in order to get a sufficient quantity of other desirable kinds. This method, adopted by some dealers in foisting inferior stock on retailers, is a two-edged sword; it gives the grower a false impression as to the value of the variety and decreases the legitimate profits of the retailer. Then again many agents fear to return a small and just price for poor colors or quality and resort to averaging, which is unfair towards merit.

In regard to methods of shipping flowers to market, there are still differences of opinion. All may agree that with specimen flowers single layers may be correct, but with ordinary stock bunches of twenty-five in each not only saves trouble and time, but often results in the retailer selling them so. One of the arguments against loose carnations is that they are not graded as roses are. The customers who select their blooms always pick out the best, with the result that you must lower the price for the next, use up otherwise or most often throw them away.

Let us say a word about foliage. The grower never considers foliage as a natural commercial adjunct to the carnation flower. It is strange that their exclusive idea of the value of foliage rests upon its freeness from rust or its utility in the rooted-cutting craze which yearly consumes in epidemic proportion. It may be that they are not sufficiently encouraged to supply this material, possibly the average buyer would grumble if called upon to pay a little extra for a few buds and foliage, but every artist knows and appreciates the value of such, and there are often times when a bud or sprig of carnation foliage is worth more than a dozen flowers. In "making up" carnations they are partly on a level with roses stripped of their leaves, and it always appears as a degradation to see these fine naked flowers surrounded with common wild ferns, even dull, lifeless Asparagus plumosus impairs their effectiveness; the only things suitable in lieu of their own foliage is some light green, graceful vine or fern that may emphasize their beauty.

Flowers to wear by lady or gentleman are no longer considered the right thing at high society dinners or parties, but to offset this drawback more flowers are being used in vases in other than the dining room. There is, and might by little suggestions, be a still greater use for carnations in all kinds of bouquets and vase work, in fact, they are suitable for all manner of floral work. The only trouble is that they are liable to be arranged incongruously or so inartistically as to make them ridiculous. One way common now among window dressers is to stick a few in hanging vases to form wreaths and frames. The flowers show to disadvantage in that way. Carnations need to be arranged in good massive clusters with careful attention to color effects and individuality. Poor grade, even medium grade and extra choice flowers, should never be put in close proximity; one injures the other in the eyes of the customer.

We always like to tie our carnations in bunches when putting them in a box to send out, for these reasons: It results in more satisfaction to all to have your flowers look well at their destination than to please your own eye in arranging them with excessive fancy touches, which are invariably upset during transit. The average recipient of a box of flowers unpacks and arranges them in a careless or unattractive way, whereas, as should be done in the case of all spring flowers, if you tie each kind in loose bunches, the stems even at the bottom, putting a sheet of wax or white tissue paper between each bunch in the box, the results are sure to be more satisfactory to the receiver.

A great many loudly heralded carnations have been remarkable chiefly for their bursted calyxes and ragged looks. This season the rubber bands may be all right for the grower to use in such a dilemma, but the store customer is liable to see them and refuse to buy. We have avoided much of this by sewing the top of the bursted calyx with a light thread or fine wire. Needn't put it all around, just one stitch will do. There promises to be an extremely good demand for fine carnations this Easter. The basket and vase makers, in conjunction with the artists, can get up many designs that would strongly appeal to the critical buyer. There are many things easily gotten up that will hold water. These designs, be they inexpensive, right colored baskets or vases, can not only be used to display your stock in a cheap and effective way, but they will strongly appeal to the wise instead of the dried mossed up baskets of the past.

It is very much to be desired that exhibition committees, or the American Carnation Society, offer prizes for exclusive carnation decorations at the principal shows. Many times retailers feel inclined to use these flowers for table decorations, etc., at exhibitions, but the average judge would prefer mums or roses. We will discuss varieties and designs in the near future.

IVERA.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

It is now only three weeks till Easter and any crops that seem tardy should be pushed along to come in at that time, if possible. With the fine bright weather we are having and the days getting longer there is no danger of weakening stock, if it is in a vigorous condition, by raising the night temperature 4 or 5 degrees, with a corresponding raise in day temperature during sunshine.

Generous applications of liquid food will also help to develop the crop more rapidly. Beauties especially respond quickly to liquid feeding during bright weather. Beauties and Meteors being gross feeders, ought now to be getting it regularly once a week. They can use it much stronger and more frequently than Brides and Bridesmaids. One-half pound of salts of ammonia dissolved in twenty gallons of water and applied once a week to backward crops also helps.

While increasing the temperature, ventilation must be strictly attended to. The temperature should not be raised by withholding ventilation, but by turning on an extra pipe at night. Increase of temperature means more water and syringing. By careful and judicious treatment along these lines crops can be advanced at this season a good week without detriment to the stock.

RIBES.

CARE OF GRAFTED ROSES.

Please tell me how to care for young grafted roses in the frame, giving the temperature the frame should be kept at, stating when to admit the first crack of air and when to increase it, and how long the plants should be in the frames before removing them. If the young rose plants need water, would it be harmful to open the frames before the scion has united with the stock?

W. A. B.

The question of the care of newly grafted stock is one which it is difficult to answer in a satisfactory manner, so many, many circumstances have to be taken into consideration, such as the condition of stocks, scions, the kind of pit or frame to be used, etc.

Success can be had under ordinary circumstances by keeping the temperature of the frame at 60 to 64 degrees for the first eight or ten days or until the majority of the scions are united. Some propagators use a higher temperature with good success, but for Brides and Bridesmaids this is sufficient. During this period it is a good plan to open up the frames for a few minutes morning and evening, to change the air; it does no harm unless left open too long. As soon as uniting has taken place air can be given gradually and the temperature reduced till it reaches 56 degrees. This will require about five days, when they can be removed to the bench.

While the plants are in the frames they require very little water until air is admitted. When put on the benches, if the drainage is good, they will require frequent watering and syringing, especially during sunny weather.

RIBES.

VIOLETS.

We have been asked to give "complete cultural methods employed from first to last, with kind of house, soil, etc." Well, there are "many men of many minds," but for the house, it is generally conceded that an even-span north and south house is the best, all things considered. Later we will give our ideas of a model violet house, though they may not coincide with every other grower's ideas, as there are always surrounding circumstances to modify such plans. We may necessarily repeat much that we have at previous times written, as we cannot answer the above questions without doing so, yet I suppose it is well, as such articles as this are not written for old growers who already know how, but for the new readers of the Review, and those who for various reasons have never devoted their time and attention to this particular branch of the greenhouse business.

I would advise a grower that has a demand for violets to try and grow his own if he has the time, room, suitable soil and location. At the same time I should not encourage him too much about his success, for I don't think I will be contradicted when I say that they are the hardest and most uncertain crop to grow under glass; yet, given a good crop and a fair market, you feel amply repaid for the care and labor bestowed upon them. You may say that all this is a digression, perhaps it is, but if you are at all short of time and help my advice would be not to attempt to grow them, for they must have care and lots of it, and that when they demand it if you expect to make a success of them.

Soil. This should be prepared a year in advance. You want a good, heavy sod from a field that has been well cultivated and enriched and that has not had any greenhouse stock grown thereon or soil spread upon it from the houses. You will then have all you wish to do to keep the plants when set out, in such a state as you desire, free from aphis, etc. Haul this to where you expect to pile your soil to mix it for houses, and pile it up in alternate layers with the manure, as you do all of your greenhouse soil. We take about six to eight inches, including the sod, if the soil is good, and the field has had good, deep cultivation. We prefer a good, medium loam, although we have grown good violets in a light, sandy soil; in fact, grew them in the latter entirely the first few years that we went into violet growing, though now we find we can do much better with a heavier soil.

For manure, there is nothing that we have tried, that, taken all in all, equals good cow manure, although we have tried other kinds with fair success. If your soil is very heavy you can use well rotted horse manure, but we consider it as a rule too dry and heating. This soil should be piled up as soon in the spring as the ground is in condition to work nice. Don't make the mistake of handling it when it is too wet, as nothing hurts ground more for any purpose than this. Then the pile should be worked over thoroughly every two or three weeks all summer long, in fact as often as possible, taking care, as I have before said, not to handle it when wet. Briefly restated, draw your soil in the spring (or the fall before if more convenient), work all summer, pile up over winter, and work over again at least once before filling the houses.

This is, of course, where you grow your violets in the house and not out doors. The latter method we abandoned several years ago, as they do not do nearly as well grown outside as they do in, and you have so much extra labor, too, where you lift in the fall from field. Of course, we always plan to have a quantity outside to fill in where a plant dies or is weak. The pile of soil should also be conveniently located to the house or houses to be filled so that there may be no extra or unnecessary distance to cart or wheel it into the same. Frequently a beginner will have much better success for the first few seasons than an older grower, owing largely, I think, to new, fresh soil, houses, etc.

RED SPIDER.

How can I get rid of the red spider pest? I am bothered a great deal with this insect, especially on my carnations, lilies and cinerarias. As soon as I noted them I commenced spraying with water. I fumigate twice a week with tobacco but can't see as I am getting rid of them. Isn't there some way to accomplish it? W.

Red spider is one of the most troublesome of our insect pests, not so ready to attack plants as the common aphis but much more difficult to dislodge. Still it is less excusable because syringing (not spraying) if properly done will keep away the spider, but tobacco in some form or other must be used or aphis will appear. Fortunately most plants that are troubled with spider enjoy and are benefited by a good hard syringing.

For years we have seen no occasion to syringe carnations (except the first week after planting) till the month of April, then spider is more than likely to appear, but then you can also syringe with all freedom without any injury to the carnations. Perhaps some may think that syringing is done with the object of knocking off these little red brutes, or that the water drowns them. Not at all. The syringing destroys their web, and their means of transit is destroyed, and if persistently done that's the end of them.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred neglect of syringing is the cause of red spider, and it usually appears in winter time where the heat of the pipe comes up at the back of the bench, or in hot, dry weather in any part of the house. They are always found on the under side of the leaf (except perhaps in such neglected cases that they crowd each other all over the leaf) because these little creatures have learned through millions of years of experience that if they were on the top side of the leaf the first rain storm would destroy their habitation and domestic arrangements. What a pity that Noah took any of the little wretches into the ark. It is generally understood by students in that line that Mrs. Noah and the young ladies had charge of the horticultural department, and no doubt Mrs. N. in taking in a plant of lemon verbena, it served as host plant for the tiny creature that now gives us so much anxiety.

I have seen the common zonale geraniums infested with spider all summer out of doors, even during a rainy season, because no storm reached the under side of the leaf. Just a word about syringing. Comparatively few know how to syringe effectively. It must be a fine but strong stream directed upwards at the underside of the leaves. Nothing else will destroy spider. The old-womanish term "spraying" is more applied to what good old gardeners would call a "dusting;" strange thing to dust with (water), but gardeners know exactly what it means, which is a fine spray of water thrown over the plants, which we do to freshly potted cuttings or plants that have been exhausted by a hot day, but that is entirely different from syringing.

Now for a specific remedy for the plants that are infested. The carnations and lilies should certainly be cleaned of spider by good hard syringing with cold water. The cinerarias I would take down and lay on the path and well hose the underside of the leaves. Two or three such thorough syringings should settle the spider.

There are any amount of "cure alls" or insecticides warranted to kill aphis, thrip, mealy bugs, etc., and everything else that our plants are troubled with. One of the oldest and best is "Gishurst Compound," sold by all seedsmen. Just let me say here that the red spider is a "sucking" insect, or beast, not a chewer, so poison on the surface of the leaf does not affect him as it would a chewer. "Nikoteen" diluted in 300 of water, or the "rose leaf extract of tobacco," diluted 75 times, are both good for killing spider if thoroughly well syringed on. The "kerosene emulsion" is death to them applied with syringe. You can buy the latter all ready for mixing with water, and it is death not only to spider, but for thrip and mealy bug also.

I have, as a boy, often seen sulphur burnt in vineries to kill spider on the grapevines, and you can try it by heating an old shovel or spade nearly red hot and then drop a pinch of sulphur on the shovel as you walk slowly along. But it is a dangerous operation, and in killing the spider you run a big chance of burning the foliage. Try the kerosene emulsion and get it from the most reliable firm. W. S.

A FUNGUS AND A FERN.

An inquiry comes from a correspondent which boiled down is this: "A white mould gathers on the pots quite thick." And again what is the matter with his ferns, "The tips of the fronds are burned brown and then drop. What is the proper temperature for such ferns as sword ferns, Boston ferns and Wittboldii?"

First, as to the fungus. I have frequently seen a white fungus on the pots, but never but a few in the house, and then it had come from some plunging material and I saw no great harm come from it; in moving the plants it was easily rubbed off. This trouble can be scarcely serious enough to be of any consequence.

The tips of the ferns should not turn brown unless on very old exhausted fronds, and then the tips would not turn brown but the whole frond would turn yellow. If kept in a night temperature of 55 to 60 degrees, properly supplied with water, that is, a thorough watering whenever on the dry side, there should be no trouble in growing these free-growing ferns. It is possible that a very heavy fumigating might have burned the fronds of these ferns, but it must have been strong to do it. A good loam, full daylight, and a temperature of 55 degrees at night will grow all the ferns mentioned. W. S.

SWEET PEAS.

W. Atlee Burpee & Co. have a national reputation for their sweet pea seed. Their novelties and their standard varieties are famous all over the country. They are hard at it now, busy as bees, for the sowing season is here. Great satisfaction was expressed at the strides made by the growers in forcing sweet peas under glass. There are more and finer sweet peas in the cut flower market to-day than ever before. We also have white as well as pink and white; the other colors will stand forcing well but take longer to come into bloom. Lovely improves in color under glass, its pale, pink flowers gaining a deeper color, which is very pleasing; Countess of Radnor, on the contrary, comes with a pinkish tint when forced, which mars the beauty of its soft shade of lavender.

Experiments made with sweet peas under glass at Doylestown show that for early flowering, raised benches are much better than solid beds; the latter very choice flowers with stems often 16 inches in length. By frequent and heavy mulching sweet peas have been flowered steadily from December until July, four inches of soil being enough when aided by plenty of manure to keep the vines moving all this time. No matter how early sweet peas are planted in the fall it seems impossible to flower them for Christmas when they are in solid beds. The vines seem to refuse to flower until the sun gets stronger. It is thought, however, that a temperature of 60 degrees at night maintained regularly throughout the fall might bring them into flower at Christmas even when the vines are growing in solid beds.

PALE HYDRANGEAS.

For some time I have been troubled with light colored foliage on Hydrangea Otaksa. Not sickly plants, but on all my stock, with the exception of occasionally a plant, which will come with dark rich green foliage, under same treatment and conditions so far as I know. The plants now growing on for Easter are looking well in every respect except the pale foliage. Can you suggest cause and remedy? Have renewed stock from different sources with same results. C. L. D.

I am glad to see this question asked, but would rather that some one would reply who never was troubled with these pale yellow leaves on the hydrangea. We have had this trouble some years to a great extent and it not only affects the leaf, but the flower also will be colorless. This year, perhaps, from the soil we are using, the foliage is a good dark green. The hydrangea is a rich feeder, wanting manure in abundance, but a heavy, strong clay loam is also essential to do it well. In the present instance with C. L. D. I would advise him to put one pound of nitrate of soda in forty gallons of water and use this solution every other day. If nitrate of soda is not easily available then procure some soft coal soot and use it in proportion of one peek of soot to forty gallons of water. This you can use at every watering. W. S.

Bassett & Washburn's Display of Standard Varieties at Indianapolis.

NEW YORK.

The eastern carnation enthusiasts whose privilege it was to attend that glorious convention at Indianapolis have returned safely, and with only the happiest memories. They are especially jubilant in bagging both the presidency and the convention of 1903, and look forward to the opportunity of giving their western brethren a reciprocal and royal welcome. We feel sure the new president will prove the right man in the right place.

The prince has come and we are delighted with him. He is so much like an American in his democratic manners and cordiality and tact. Tuesday evening occurred the great operatic welcome at the Metropolitan. Never in its history has such a scene of wealth and beauty and floral splendor been witnessed. Thorley's contract for flowers and decorations amounted, it is said, to nearly $10,000. Innumerable American Beauty roses, flowering plants and wild smilax transformed the great auditorium into a floral bower. The florists generally are having a most profitable week. The dinner at the Waldorf will engage the decorative abilities of Small's artists.

The florists well deserve a prosperous week, for the last one was the most trying to the trade. For years, not since 1888, has the snow so completely dominated the city and surrounding country. Even now the streets are in nearly every part of the city almost impassable. The weather has become "springlike," and from almost zero the thermometer has advanced to 50 degrees and the sun is shining with the warmth of summer.

The depression in prices, however, has been checked and this week the prices of two weeks ago are re-established.

Dr. N. L. Britton, director of the New York Botanical Garden, is agitating an additional endowment of half a million dollars, the funds to be used in scientific investigation and the collection of rare plants for the conservatories. The five new greenhouses lately completed cost nearly $69,000. Three expeditions have been arranged. The present endowment already amounts to nearly $700,000.

The plant auctions by Cleary and Elliott begin on March 4, hardy plants, roses and rhododendrons of recent importation being first on the programme.

The bowlers have yielded of late to the intense strain of the winter season and rested. Three or four of the invincibles in New York turn up regularly as usual, but the "rank and file," especially the "rank," have placed themselves on the waiting list.

Dennis Lahey, the largest florist on Long Island, if not in America, has passed on to join the "great majority." His age was 37 and his weight nearly 700 pounds.

The nurserymen in this vicinity are anticipating a busy season. At Elizabeth I called on Hiram Jones and the Elizabeth Nursery Co., and found the latter firm busy building three of a range of twelve greenhouses, 22x150, to be completed this summer, with boiler pit and all other necessities provided for to increase the plant to double the size at an early date. On the eight acres which the company has purchased close to the city, handsome offices and an immense packing shed 125x60 will be erected in time for the shipping of stock this spring. Mr. Gibbons is the architect.

Mr. David Mellis is convalescent, and Mr. Wadley continues to improve.

Eastern N. Y. Horticultural Society.

The Eastern New York Horticultural Society held its sixth annual meeting at the American Institute on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, and the attendance averaged 200. The institute offered some valuable prizes for the best exhibits of plants, flowers, fruits and vegetables, and the display of each was varied and creditable. Before the close of the meeting the amalgamation of this society with the New York Horticultural Society was announced. The next meeting place is Poughkeepsie, and semi-annual conventions were decided upon.

Siebrecht & Son exhibited a collection of rhododendrons, genistas, acacias, azaleas and hyacinths, and a large plant of Coelogyne cristata, receiving first prize therefor. Lager & Hurrell, of Summit, N. J., made an excellent display of orchids of twenty varieties, including cattleyas, dendrobiums, Laelia flava, phalaenopsis, coelogynes and Sophronitis grandiflora.

Fred Weinberg, of Woodside, made a fine cacti exhibit. He has a stock of over 2,000 varieties, and received a special prize.

C. W. Ward exhibited a vase of Mrs.

Theo. Roosevelt carnations and one of his red seedlings.

Herbert Spavins, of Mt. Kisco, showed two seedling red carnations.

Henry Clinkaberry, Trenton, N. J., displayed a fine lot of cypripediums.

W. C. Russell, of Millbrook, N. Y., made a grand exhibit of roses and carnations and well deserved the prizes won.

The violet prizes were won by G. T. Scheunemann, of Baldwins, N. Y.; C. G. Velle, of Marlborough, N. Y.; G. H. Hale, Seabright, N. J., and William Scott, of Tarrytown, N. Y.

The apple, pear and vegetable exhibits were interesting and creditable.

The president of the society was George T. Powell, of Briarcliff Manor, N. Y., and the lectures, essays and discussions of the meeting continued to crowd the rooms until the close of the convention. The speakers were always interesting and many of them are able men and thorough horticulturists, for Prof. Card, of the Rhode Island experiment station; Prof. G. H. Powell, pomologist of Washington; Prof. Johnson, of the American Agriculturist; Prof. Beach, of Geneva; Dr. Roberts, of the Cornell Agricultural college, and Prof. Slingerland, of the same institution, and Dr. Jordan, of the Geneva experiment station, were among the notable speakers, and in every case held the close attention of the members and gave most interesting and valuable addresses.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Philadelphia was visited by a storm of unusual severity last week. Great destruction was caused by the rain freezing on trees and wires during the day, which was followed by a gale at night, causing the heavily laden branches to break under the strain, and bringing thousands of wires to the ground. The scene on Sunday morning when the sun rose upon the fairyland of ice and snow was wonderfully beautiful, but also heart-breaking to lovers of trees, the destruction of which is beyond description. The photographers were out in full force Sunday trying to catch the fleeting scenes.

The effect on business was very serious. Telegraphic news was cut off; many messages arrived too late for the orders to be filled. The telephone service was also paralyzed. The trolleys and trains were much delayed, but few shoppers ventured out. Considering all these drawbacks, business has been fair though slow. Prices have fallen a little this week, notably on violets, colored carnations, sweet peas and valley. Fancy Beauties are scarcer than at almost any time this season. This is rather curious, as several of the largest growers aimed for a continuous supply rather than a Christmas crop. The price is $7.50 to $8 per doz. Other roses bring about the same as a week ago, but are not so firm. White carnations are more in demand than the colored sorts; $2 to $3 per 100 buys good flowers; $1 to $1.50, common ones. Sweet peas bring $1 per 100; valley, $3; La Reine tulips and Narcissus Von Sion are in over supply.

Darby Road.

J. William Colflesh, Fifty-third and Woodlawn avenue, has a great variety of Easter and spring plants, which make his place interesting at this season. His lilies are stocky and vigorous, apparently free from disease. Most of them are in 6-inch pots. A few 12-inch pans are seen with 6 plants to the pan; no stakes are needed. Spiræas are making good growth; also hydrangeas. Many bulbs are forced both in boxes and in pots. The varieties noticed were Narcissus Von Sion; tulips, La Reine, Belle Alliance, Tournesol, Murillo, Keizerskroom, Yellow Prince and Proserpine.

Spring plants are in all stages from the large geraniums, heliotropes and mignonette, intended for early use, to the small seedlings in boxes that will be just right in May. Cinerarias are in full bloom, with more to follow. There are two houses each of carnations and Asparagus plumosus, and three or four of palms and other foliage plants. In roses, Beauty, Bride, Maid and Kaiserin are grown.

A feature of the place is a single span to the south house, 105x19 feet, filled with Jacqueminots planted out in the ground some time in the eighties and kept steadily at work ever since. This house should make a fine showing at Easter.

Various Notes.

Henry A. Dreer Company state that Azalea Madame Van der Cruyssen will be scarce this Easter. A. Vervæneana is more plentiful than in the past and should make a good substitute where pink and white can be used.

B. Eschner, of the firm of M. Rice & Co., was called home last week by the death of Mr. Rice's mother. His friends will deplore the cause of his absence.

"Name the three best geraniums for out door bedding" was a question in the box at the last meeting of the Germantown Horticultural Society. The answer from John Holt is: red, S. A. Nutt; white, La Favorite; pink, Jean Viaud.

The Florists' Bowling club defeated their nearest rivals in the tournament, the Century Wheelmen, last week in three straight games. The score (2,824) establishes a new five men record for this city, or an average of 188½ pins per man per game. The florist team that accomplished this splendid feat consisted of Moss, Dunham, Moore, Starr and Johnson.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions for Feb. 17-22.

There was a general unsteadiness in all lines, weather included, also the money supply. The latter fact and the prevailing season of Lent is probably all the excuse that may be offered for dullness in flower trade.

Roses.—New York supply of red roses is plentiful enough, but local growers are running very short, but small Liberties are beginning to come more plentifully. Pink and white roses are running to extra large sizes, so that prices have dropped on that grade, but not on smaller sizes, yet few of them now sell for more than $1.50 a dozen. Other colors not much in evidence.

Pinks.—This crop has not been in such good condition for a long time. I do not think the large regular buyers have yet asked for a reduction in price but they get a better blossom for the same money. Irregular buyers are demanding smaller prices and the street men begin to expect an inning. Three cents takes a good one, indeed, but few bringing more, and some have been sold for less than one cent.

Violets.—Seem to be coming good for the time of year. Thirty-five to seventy-five.

Bulb Goods.—Valley and lilies plentiful enough and selling at low figures. Green material, including mignonette, is out in full force; but not much for small white flowers can be found outside of the smaller bulbous blossoms.

Stickfuls.

Much surprise was caused by the announcement in a morning paper that James Delay, the veteran florist of Boylston street, had filed a petition in the courts of insolvency, stating liabilities of over $1,800 and assets of $700. Further developments are anxiously awaited.

J. S. Manter.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The supply has further increased and there is practically a glut of colored carnations and violets. Good roses are going fairly well, with white in the lead. With the fakirs off the streets there is really no outlet for lower grade colored stock and the presence of this grade in the market undoubtedly affects prices of the medium grades. The retailers naturally feel very independent under existing conditions and make very low bids when buying.

As to ruling prices, roses range from $5 to $8 for really good stock, with sales of lower grades at $3 and $4 and even down to $2. In Beauties the best long stemmed still bring $4 and $5, with medium lengths at $2 and $3, but the shorts and imperfect flowers sell at very low rates. In carnations the range for good flowers is from $1 to $2.50, with fancy at $3, and we hear of clean-up sales, mostly poor colored flowers, at as low as $3 to $6 per 1,000.

There is a great abundance of bulbous flowers and these help to aggravate the situation. At the same time the volume of business is very fair for the season, though prices are certainly averaging very low just now.

Various Items.

Quite a number of the eastern men present at the Indianapolis convention visited Chicago before returning home and there were many little excursions to the various growers around the city. On Saturday quite a number visited the plant of the Chicago Carnation Co. at Joliet. There were several excursions to Hinsdale to visit the houses of Bassett & Washburn, while at Summerdale Mr. Peter Reinberg entertained numerous visitors. Among these visitors were C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y.; Ernst Asmus, West Hoboken, N. J.; P. M. Pierson, Scarborough, N. Y.; Wm. Scott, Buffalo, N. Y.; W. F. Kasting, wife and baby; J. H. Dunlop and W. Muston, Toronto, Ont.; W. Gammage, London, Ont.; Edw. Dale, Brampton, Ont.; W. A. Kennedy and N. Zweifel, Milwaukee.

John Degnan, for eighteen years with Vaughan's Seed Store, and for the last few years one of the buyers for the house, has resigned his position there and has taken an interest in the firm of McKellar & Winterson, where he will have charge of the seed and bulb department, which will be very much enlarged. The firm will hereafter be known as the McKellar & Winterson Co.

The program for the meeting of the Florists' Club Wednesday evening included a competitive exhibition of plants showing cultural skill.

Mrs. C. Eickholt, Galveston, Tex., was a recent visitor.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society of Chicago has been called for this Thursday to take action on the proposition of the Chrysanthemum Society of America looking to the holding of a meeting and exhibition of that organization in connection with the coming fall exhibition.

Mr. H. Weber, Oakland, Md., visited Chicago on his way home from Indianapolis.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The past week trade was rather slow, but enough business is doing to keep things from becoming stagnant, and the Lenten dullness has changed the prices in the flower market somewhat.

The rose market is better and some very fine stock of Brides, Maids, Meteors and Gates were seen the past week at the commission houses. From $4 to $8 per 100 was the price for first-class stock. American Beauties, long, are selling from $3 to $5 per dozen, with shorts from $6 to $15 per 100.

Carnations are still coming in in fine shape and plenty of them, except white, which are in great demand for funeral work. Fancies are now down to $3; fairly good stock goes at $2, with common at $1.50.

Bulb stuff is a glut. Valley, tulips and daffs are moving slowly, especially valley, and daffs are hard to sell at any price. Romans and paper whites are also plentiful at $2 and $3. Harrisiis are yet not overplentiful at $12.50 for the best. Callas are more plentiful at $8.

Violets are moving fairly well, but are by no means scarce. Fifty and 60 cents is asked for Californias and 75 cents and $1 for doubles.

A few fine lots of sweet peas came in the past week, which sold at 75 cents.

The call for smilax has fallen off a great deal since Lent.

Notes.

Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, was a visitor the past week.

George M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill, Mo., stopped over a day the past week on his way to the carnation meeting.

F. C. Weber, John Stridle, John Young, F. M. Ellis, J. F. Ammann, E. W. Guy and Henry Berning, who attended the carnation meeting at Indianapolis the past week, returned home much pleased with what they saw and heard.

The Engleman Botanical Club will hold a meeting tonight (Monday, the 24th) in the High School auditorium. The object of the meeting is to push the street tree planting and home decorations. Dr. Herman Von Schrenk, W. J. Stevens, Prof. H. C. Irish and others will address the meeting.

CLEVELAND.

Various Items.

At a regular meeting of the Florists' Club Monday evening one new member was elected. We had the pleasure of a visit from Mr. McHutchinson, who gave us a little talk on the growing of lily of the valley pips in and around Berlin and Hamburg. Herman Hart had on exhibition a large vase of carnations, which showed up very fine considering that they were grown with ordinary treatment and not for a fancy trade. His Lawson, Joost, Crane and G. Lord being especially fine. George Smith also exhibited a vase of his seedling, which compared favorably with some of the older varieties.

Casper Aul also has a fine seedling, which he is working up as fast as possible, but he does not intend to exhibit it at present.

A visit to some of the growers this week revealed them all hustling to get stock ready for Easter.

Hart's place was found to be in its usual spick and span condition, everything clean and neat; his carnations being exceptionally fine and healthy. He has a fine lot of Crimson Ramblers and hybrid roses that will be just right for Easter; also a fine lot of cinerarias, hydrangeas and azaleas. His lilies this year are not much, too many of them failed to make a growth. His callas are very good and his spring bedding stock is well advanced and in prime condition.

George Smith's greenhouse showed that there is a man at the head who looks after every detail. He grows exclusively for his store trade.

G. M. Naumann has a house of violets that are simply blue with flowers; also one that will be in for Easter. His Crimson Ramblers and hybrid roses are also fine, as are his carnations.

When I visited Casper Aul he was busy propagating spring stock, but he had time to show me around. He has a batch of Harrisii lilies that are the finest I have seen up to date; here you will also find Crimson Ramblers and hydrangeas for Easter; he will also have a lot of carnations in just right.

B. Hart, son of H. Hart, will be removed from the hospital to his home today.

Mr. Fred Aul was at the club meeting last night for the first time since his return from the hospital.

Flowers here the past two weeks have been rather scarce, roses, especially good stock, bringing almost holiday prices. Carnations are selling from $1.50 to $4; Romans, $2 to $4; daffodils and tulips, $3 and $4; narcissus, $3. The scarcest stock seemed to be white. In plants, bulb stuff in pots and pans seems to have the call except where large plants are wanted; then it is the azalea that is called for. Azaleas seem to be in greater demand this year than ever before.

At the present time the florists' business is at a low ebb and there seems to be a great plenty of everything. The craft are busy getting Easter stuff in shape.

Lilies are going to be very scarce, but there will be the usual amount of bulb stuff. Several of the florists will have some fine Ramblers and there will be a great many hybrids and plenty of azaleas.

The brethren that visited the convention arrived home right side up with no complaints whatever, but with words of praise for the Indianapolis florists for the royal manner in which they were entertained.

The party that went by way of Cincinnati desire to thank Mr. Peterson and his brother florists, the Heller Bros. of New Castle, the florists of Richmond, and the F. Dorner & Sons Co., of La Fayette for the royal manner in which they were received and entertained at the different places that were visited by them.

CINCINNATI.

The market during the past week had its ups and downs and business averaged about fair. The supply of roses was much larger than anything this year and prices were not very high. Good fancy carnations were scarce and brought top figures. Other stock was in good supply, especially Romans and narcissus which met with slow sale.

W. C. Nolan has returned from Lexington, Ky., and is now staying in this city.

The supply pipe from Wm. Murphy's pond froze up last week and he was pushed hard for water, being obliged to haul it some distance.

Gus Adrian is on the sick list, suffering from a severe cold.

Henry Schwarz's plant in Norwood is in nice shape now and Henry is doing a good business.

L. F. Darnell, storeman for the J. M. Gasser Co., of Cleveland, passed through this city on his way home.

H. H. Ritter, Dayton, O., and C. E. Bower, Birmingham, Ala., were callers.

S. M. Harbison, Danville, Ky.; Wm. Weber, Oakland, Md., and W. Gravett, Lancaster, O., passed through this city on their way home from the convention.

C. J. Ohmer.

ANCHORAGE, KY.

The Anchorage Rose Co. will go out of business in May next, having sold its stock and buildings to Charles Rayner, the manager of the firm.

Mr. Rayner will after that date transfer the greenhouses and other buildings to his "Roseview" place, where they will be remodeled and reconstructed, to connect with his glass there. When this work is completed it will be a model plant in its way. In addition, he intends to erect one new house, 30x300. The houses to be erected this summer are three houses, each 30x300 and one 30x150, in addition to a lot of frames.

A novelty in the construction will be a central underground sub-way extending under the center of all the houses and containing the boilers, machine room, cisterns, packing cellars, ice cellars, coal bins, etc., and by which a wagon can easily pass in and out, facilitating the filling and emptying of benches, as arrangements are made for the dropping of a small portion of the bench to the wagon, thus filling from the center or emptying as desired. In all, the plant will contain some 54,000 feet, erected on Garland iron gutters in one block.

R.

CORRECTION.

The W. A. Proctor silver vase, valued at $100, and offered for best separate collection of commercial varieties of carnations, was awarded to W. K. Partridge, Lockland, Ohio, and not to Bassett & Washburn, as reported last week. The error was due to a misinterpretation of the secretary's notes.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Various Items.

The heavy rains of the past two weeks have not helped the demand for cut flowers very much; however, we can stand it. Since the holidays business has been very good indeed; flowers of all kinds were never so scarce, and bring high prices at wholesale, leaving a very narrow margin for the retailer. The rains were a blessing to the state as far as they went. The frosts and dry weather kept everything back in its growth. The hillsides are now covered with a beautiful coat of green; almond, peach and acacia trees are covered with blossoms, and violets are in their glory, and perfume the air wherever grown.

American Beauties are and have been for some time very scarce, only a favored few of the retailers getting a chance to handle them. What stock is coming in is short-stemmed and the buds are nothing extra; the same may be said of Meteor and Liberty; Brides and Maids are in fair supply and very good as to quality. Carnations are fair in quality with a large percentage of split calyxes; nevertheless they are bringing good prices right along. Violets are very fine, the weather just suiting them. Market is over-stocked with them and prices are away down. Harrisii is coming in in small lots.

J. Gilmore, Elmhurst, is cutting some fine Meteors and Liberties, which are the best seen in the market.

Daniel R. Love will move to 1217 Broadway, Oakland, Cal., March 1. The location is a good one and the selection could not have been better made.

That go-ahead young man, Charlie Stapenbeck, Polk street, is not contented with the enlargement of his store from 10 to 30 feet frontage, three new salesmen and a wife. When will Charlie stop? The latest addition is a horse and wagon with liveried driver. Charlie calls the horse Nancy Hanks, although no blood relation to its celebrated namesake. Nancy has a record of a mile in twenty minutes, as whispered about town.

Miss Feschiemer has opened a cosy little florist store at 1150 Sutter street and is carrying a very choice stock in large variety.

Mr. R. Armstrong and wife, of Santa Barbara, are visitors in town this week. Bob is looking up some nursery stock for his ten-acre tract of land recently purchased by him in Santa Barbara. It is his intention to run a nursery there.

James Niven, Oakland, has received an addition to his family in the shape of a son. They seem to come more than ever, or more than he ever bargained for. This makes four to date. James seems to be raising them on the European plan, or, as Tom Sheppard would say, "We 'ave them in England thirteen to the 'ouses."

Lyons & Antonia have opened a new store on Sutter street, near Geary street.

H. S. Sanborn, Oakland, has erected alongside his store on 14th street a plant house 25x40, with a beautiful electric fountain and rockery in center. When lighted up at night it makes a most beautiful display of color, the electric lights being of various colors. The cost was $1,000.

Shanahan has been very busy with funeral work this week. J. N.

The special spring number of the Review, to be issued March 20, will be a beauty. Prepare your advs. now.

OMAHA.

The bright weather has had a decided effect in changing the appearance of the features of the florists in this vicinity. Old Sol has done much to make amends for previous dull weather.

Flowers are much more plentiful, especially violets. All florists report the trade good for the Lenten period.

J. F. Wilcox put up a fine decoration for the George Washington club. The mantel decorations were fine. A flag of immortelles was suspended over the entrance to the ball room and the stage decoration was also elaborate, a portrait of George Washington was suspended amid decorations of wild smilax and palms. Several vases of fine American Beauty and other roses helped to make up a fine showing.

Bowling.

The bowling club met in weekly combat February 18, at the Vienna alleys. Below are the scores:

	1	2	3	4	5
J. Bath	102	122	125	144	145
H. Sanford	94	104	99	94	119

G. Zimmer	...	...	110	146	138
R. Zaber	...	...	90	65	104

Mr. Zaber was initiated in the art of bowling, this being his first time on the alleys. J. H. H.

TORONTO.

Lent has opened with a scarcely perceptible difference in trade receipts. If anything, the opening days of the fasting season have seen an increased receipt register at the close of the day, and it's not on account of any special events, but owing to a direct transient trade.

St. Valentine's day there was an especially heavy sale on violets, that graceful form of valentine taking a very prominent part in the "heart's wishes" sent by many a doting swain.

The general trend of business is as I have already intimated, leaning toward an especially good season from now on, and as there is every indication that there will soon be plenty of everything, this year should exceed, or at least equal, the hopes of the most expansive of our growers and retailers.

The department stores are doing a big business and I am pleased to note the fact that they are not the cheapest places in the city to buy flowers, for during the recent scarcity in roses they could be bought outside of the big stores cheaper by considerable than they were ticketed there. It is beginning (contrary to the expectations of most of our florists) to be understood that the department stores are not a detriment to trade here, but have worked up a trade all their own, a trade which the smaller store man could never attract were he to try ever so hard. True, they do perhaps touch a line of the cheaper class of society people, but the small retailer is, I firmly believe, fully compensated for any loss of his old-time customers by the necessary attraction to the flower line of the new class of buyers.

Our big growers report cut roses and carnations rather scarce. From Dale of Brampton the report is: Carnations and bulbous stuff fairly plentiful and good; but roses, though a good cut is being taken off, scarce on account of big demand; violets enough and very fine.

Dunlop seems to be a little closer on roses, but has some nice carnations, bulbous stock and violets, though the latter are not any too plentiful with him. Retail trade good.

Dixon of London is sending the commission house some nice carnations.

The Toronto Floral Company and Mr. W. Lawrence are both beginning to bring in some nice roses and other cut flowers.

C. W.

Washington, D. C.—No finer specimens of roses have ever been used at the White House than the Ivories, Bridesmaids and Beauties at the President's dinner to Prince Henry of Germany. The contract was awarded to the American Rose Company, and they secured magnificent specimens of American Beauty from S. S. Pennock, of Philadelphia. The American Rose Company are cutting Ivory flowers almost as large as a big Beauty.

Port Allegany, Pa.—J. C. Galloway, formerly of Oxford, Ohio, has rented W. R. Ventre's greenhouses here.

THE CHICAGO CARNATION CO.

Can please you with BLOOMS AND CUTTINGS.

CONGRATULATIONS ARE BEING RECEIVED FROM ALL SIDES REGARDING THE QUALITY OF OUR CUTTINGS.

Address, JOLIET, ILLINOIS.

HARTFORD, CONN.

The demand for roses and carnations exceeds the supply at the present time, there having been numerous teas, receptions, etc., just before Lent. The funerals of late consumed a large quantity of choice flowers.

The Florists' Club met on the eve of the 11th. President McRonald (historian, so-called) gave us the history of the trade from 1870 to the present time. It was very interesting to all but more especially to the younger members of the craft. K. E. Carlson read a paper entitled "Does There Exist Any Overproduction of Cut Flowers?" Taking the negative side, Mr. Carlson brought out a good argument.

The city is besieged by traveling men this week—Mr. Beatus, of Dayton, O.; Mr. Munson, of New Haven, Conn.; Mr. Knickman and Mr. Boddington, of New York, and others. As usual they each wore a smile and looked prosperous.

Mr. A. N. Pierson, of Cromwell, called on some of the growers last week. When asked as to the outlook for lilies for Easter he remarked that he was about sold out, never having taken orders so early any previous year. Mr. Pierson grows 100,000 for the Easter trade.

NON-FREEZABLE GUTTERS.

In the Pittsburg notes in the last issue of the Review I see a quoted letter in which the writer says: "Do not for one moment believe in a non-freezable gutter. Such a thing is a myth, excepting in non-freezable climates."

As I do not believe this writer intends to mislead the florists, he should look the matter up more thoroughly, for I can assure him by the testimony of eighty-seven of the leading growers of the country that cast iron gutters do not freeze. George M. Garland.

Aqueduct, L. I.—Mr. G. F. Neipp lost his oldest daughter, Sophie, his brother-in-law, Mr. Trostel, and family of seven, and his nephew, Fred Trostel, in the recent gas explosion in Archer avenue, Chicago.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Recent Decorations.

No doubt you have all read the glowing descriptions of the decorations put up for Prince Henry in New York. There is mostly always a vast amount of exaggeration about these affairs and a fair share of it doesn't do any harm, providing growers and retailers don't swallow or get excited over it. The decorations put up in honor of the prince in New York were very fine. The specifications for those done in the Metropolitan Opera House were arranged by a committee of prominent citizens and all the principal florists were invited to bid on the work, which included electric lighting, etc. Of course, every one tried for the work and gave away much time and valuable ideas. Thorley was the successful bidder, and considering the time at his disposal and the fact that the ceiling of the house (which is one of the most difficult in the country, there being only four florists living who have ever been on it) had to be fixed, made it a very hard job to do.

There was a drop curtain of electric lights in white and green globes intermixed with wild smilax that was very effective. By the way, there is a new system of electric lighting that will revolutionize the present styles of decorating, and every florist should get acquainted with it. It was recently invented, is simple, very cheap and most effective with floral decorations; it was one of the leading features in the work at the opera house. The ceiling was partially covered with streamers of greens, and the front of each balcony was covered with wild smilax and dotted at intervals with clusters consisting of two Simon Mardner azaleas and one daisy, roots wrapped in moss and heads facing well to front. What was called the royal box and the entrance from the door thereto were profusely decorated with American Beauty roses. The house when finished looked very beautiful, and George Humphry and Mr. Thorley deserve much credit for the way the work was done in so short a time.

The decorations by J. H. Small & Sons at the Waldorf-Astoria on the occasion of the American Press banquet to the prince was one of the prettiest things we have seen for a long time. The famous painting by Blaschfield, which covers the ceiling of the great ballroom, was framed in wild smilax, which hung in natural sprays from ten to twenty feet in length; the boxes and upper balcony were trimmed in wild smilax and specimen plants of Cibotium Schiedei were arranged to have their graceful fronds face outward. They made a most beautiful effect; we have seldom seen a better one. (We believe the Henry A. Dreer Company grows these ferns and florists who do much fine decorating should use them.) The principal table was decorated with American Beauties, and the others with Bridesmaids, all in tall vases. White roses were worn as boutonnieres. We are sorry florists at a distance didn't try to see these decorations; it would have repaid them. Mr. Albert Small and Arthur Merritt deserve credit for putting up this, one of the prettiest sights seen here in years.

The luncheon given by the bankers at Sherry's was a grand affair. William Lee had charge of the decorations, which were most elaborate. The room was turned into a bower of fine kentias and wild smilax and the tables were ornamented with tall vases of roses.

Regarding the prices paid for these decorations, now don't swallow the large amounts you may see in the daily press. There was very little money made on some of the work, not near enough on any of it when one considers the vast amount of trouble and anxiety connected with it; but though there may be little things that some are inclined to criticise, we, knowing the difficulties in large decorations, cannot hesitate in giving the florists concerned the highest praise for the fine work done. All the decorations were pretty.

The men who deal in wild smilax got the best part of the finances. There was scarcely a ripple felt on the cut flower market, yet the prince never saw such a profusion of fine roses at this time of the year, for such is impossible in any other country, and with such material as wild smilax, etc., it is safe to say that unless the Chicago florists do it, Henry of Prussia will never see the New York decorations equaled.

Easter.

Easter is quite a way off yet, but it is not too soon to get out and buy the best you can see. It is going to be a very good Easter, and don't be afraid to buy of the right kind. Don't forget the lessons paid for at Christmas and past Easters. There is quite a lot of poor stock around—none too much of the good—and poor stock is dear at any price.

If you grow your own stock or if you depend on growers, get your plants fixed up in time in good selling sizes. Have it done out in the greenhouses; there is neither time nor room to do it in the average store, and then again plants should be grown that way to give most satisfaction. You know the old way was to get the stock in the store weeks before Easter, knock lots of it out of the pots, arrange them in tubs or baskets, with the result that it either looks sick before Easter or withers up in a hot room the same day it is sent out. The way we do now is to have lilies planted two, three, six or twelve in a tub or pot by the grower, and have azaleas put two or four, or as many as is necessary, in the short azalea pots or pans weeks before you get them at the store. They last longer with you and give customers more satisfaction.

In the large cities it is necessary to have most of the stock in sizes to sell at from $2.50 up to $25. Anything to sell at less than $1 is a nuisance to the first-class store, though there are occasions, especially in the case of children, where all has to be tolerated. There are certain plants, such as spireas, cinerarias and geraniums, etc., which we have never found profitable unless for filling in or hiding pots at decorations Easter Sunday. There is no plant too small to use providing it is well grown and of the right kind, but it is a mistake to fill up a store with small plants. The poorest people are willing to go the limit for an Easter present, and therefore what you offer should be so arranged as to entice and be worth those limits.

Hundreds of thousands of small ferns, palms and foliage plants can be used to advantage and profit in baskets and pots. The one great trouble is that it requires some one other than a $3 a week man or boy to arrange them, and most growers make the semi-annual mistake of ignoring that fact. There are some sections of the florists' business that do not advance with the times. Variety is more important in the store than it is in the greenhouse. Growers who specialize on certain plants generally come out far ahead of those who make their houses semi-botanical gardens. The growers have only the retailers to please. The latter is the representative of a multitude of tastes and ideas and it is often necessary to put up some loud or curious arrangements in order to satisfy some people.

This Easter the simple and rich plants or designs offered will be more popular than the overdressed or too elaborate. There will be a big basket and ribbon trade of course, but it will be in the line of cheap material and right colors. White and foliage green baskets will be the most popular colors, and the plain willow or rush will be preferred, but we will deal with that section later. We would advise you to see after your choice plants. Order quite a lot of the English primroses in small pots; you can arrange them in low baskets a week before Easter. See that your grower has hyacinths, tulips, valley, daffodils, jonquils and mixed bulbs in pans and have the pans well filled and finished off with selaginella or small ferns; skimpy filled pots will never sell. White and green, white and blue or white and gilt tubs of small size are cheap and go best with lilies; see that your Harrisiis and longiflorums are the very best. Mixed tubs of lilies and other bulbous flowers will sell. If you can locate some auratums or candidums in good condition you will have something every one will not.

Roses in pots will be more popular than ever this Easter. Growers might do well to grow some of their roses in pans or large pots another year. It is difficult to put roses in a basket without taking them out of pots, and that means trouble to their life. Novelties are usually an expensive luxury to the retailer. If he is wise he can originate many novelties out of very cheap material. If you have a good trade you should order and have your baskets made to order at once and select your ribbons and trimmings before you need them. There will be money lost in fluffy fancies or vile colors, so touch them not; the people will look more to the plants this year, though it is necessary to fix them up in order to show them to advantage.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Easter.

I am writing this Monday, March 3. Three weeks next Sunday is Easter Day, but we florists must always think of a few days ahead of that, particularly those who do any shipping. If we knew what the weather was going to be it would be simple to say how our crops are for earliness, but there comes the great uncertainty. We have just left behind a dozen beautiful days, bright sun and balmy air, and it has helped very much those whose lilies were backward. Now the snow is falling again and perhaps coal will have to be the only resource we can call on for most of the next twenty-five days.

Azaleas.

Almost our most important Easter plant. There is no excuse to have any of these too early or late. Any of them can be brought out by a good heat and there is always more anxiety to keep the early varieties retarded. We once put a hundred fine plants in the basement of our dwelling house. It was light and cool and dry, but they suffered on their two weeks stay there; lost color and did not look right. Beneath a bench in a cool house is better. Two weeks ago we removed a lot that were just showing color into a house that is not over 40 degrees at night and with a shade on the south side and air on all possible occasions they are about standing still, and a few days in a brighter, warmer house will bring them into the right condition. People want a lily fully out, but we find they know enough about an azalea to ask for one that "has buds to come."

Lilies.

I have seen quite a few places this last two months and mostly everywhere the lilies are a ragged, uneven lot. The Japans seem to have a dozen diseases and are very unsatisfactory. I am of the opinion that lilies are going to be scarce and those that have them can obtain a very profitable price. Getting them in flower is purely a matter of heat and perhaps helped with sunny days. If the buds can't be seen and counted now don't attempt to force them out. There is a demand for them after Easter.

If you have the Bermudas, which are in without any trouble, and you think some are too early, don't remove them to a much cooler house till they are just about to open. When about to expand their petals they will do it in almost any temperature, but a week or so before that period they will stand perfectly still if taken from a warm to a cold house. The trouble of greenfly is over, because frequent but mild fumigating will now keep them perfectly clean. Be sure and don't pretend to be too busy to have tied them up in good style.

Roses.

To our surprise the fine warm spell of late has brought along Crimson Rambler so fast that here and there a flower is out. If we could have foreseen this a lower temperature would have done, but now they can have only about 55 degrees at night, at which temperature the color and texture of the flower will be much finer than if given 10 degrees higher. We know there are a few roses that do best at 65 degrees at night, but the Ramblers and all the hybrid perpetuals are a great deal better at 10 degrees lower. The Ramblers, particularly, show a marked difference. If you can't see the trusses of flowers on the Ramblers now or the buds plainly on the hybrid perpetuals, it is no good to try and force.

Hydrangeas.

Hydrangeas should be showing the flower now or it will be a heavy force to get them in. In fact, they should be a little better than that and if near the point of showing color so much the better. They are great feeders and soon exhaust the flower and as their generic name is derived from their fondness for water, it is needless to say how much liquid they will absorb. A pound of nitrate of soda in forty gallons of water will help the color of both flower and foliage, and a peck of cow manure in same quantity of water will also be a help to them, but not every day; every other day will do.

Lilacs.

The lilac is a useful Easter plant, and if it does not sell as a pot plant it gives you a good profit to cut. There is much more profit in these plants that only need the greenhouse four or five weeks than in those that fill the benches for six months or more. You can force out lilacs with great heat in three weeks, but five weeks is better and the flower is stouter and more durable.

Primula Obconica.

A plant that is going to figure with us this year at Easter time is Primula obconica. Those who had the good fortune to see those plants of it at Indianapolis grown by H. W. Rieman and the Bertermann Floral Company now know what a wonderful decorative plant it is. It is doubtful if any better plants of obconica were ever grown anywhere, and the colors were remarkable. When you get this beautiful plant with flowers a lovely pink, you have a jewel. If you have any, keep them very cool; it is almost a hardy plant.

Cytisus, acacia and metrosideros you can control by temperature and shading, but the earliness of Easter is suiting these plants, for they are usually a little too early.

Bulbs.

We are still often asked how long before Easter should tulips and hyacinths be brought in to force. It depends altogether when Easter comes and this year they will all want what really can be called a little forcing. If three weeks later it would be so much nearer their flowering time that a few days in greenhouse would be enough. Give them all three weeks. The double tulips take a few days longer and to make up for that you can give them 10 degrees more heat. Tulips come with plenty of stem now and they should have the full daylight, so that they will have a stiff, sturdy stem. Fifty-five degrees at night will suit the tulips, hyacinths and narcissus.

Lily of the Valley.

There is always a good demand for this dainty flower at Easter time. If you have a suitable forcing bed twenty-one days will bring it along in good shape and give you a day or two to have it cut and in water. The condition that valley needs is a strong heat in the sand, perhaps now 75 degrees is enough, a cool top heat, 50 degrees is all right. Shade heavily at first with a lighter shade the last eight days and none at all for a few days and the flower never wet.

Pots and pans of valley sell well and it is no fraud to fill them from the bed after the spike is fully developed. They last just as long. We began a few years ago to dig up tulips from flats and fill pans to order. At first I thought it was a fakey trick, but it really is nothing of the kind and we have proved over and over again that a pan made up of these bulbous flowers lifted from a flat when they are just about opening their flowers will last every day as long as if grown in them and you can certainly make a fine pot or pan this way as they can be all perfect flowers.

I saw a large grower in Toronto last week who is pre-eminently a rose king, but he knows "uder t'ings when he sees 'em," and he remarked when I looked at some very stout and fine Dutch hyacinths in flats that he pots them later into 4½-inch pots and gets better results than growing them in the pots all winter. There is no fraud about it.

Buying Plants.

Now, in conclusion, a bit of what I think is sound advice. Many of you retailers have a greenhouse and many stores have the great blessing of a conservatory in the rear and you have to buy more or less, the exclusive store man everything. Now, make up your mind what you will want in azaleas, and more particularly in lilies. When in flower the full blown lily is most difficult to pack and ship and arrive in anything like good order. When only in large ready-to-open bud it is simple. Buy two weeks ahead your lilies and azaleas. The man who ships them to you knows to a certainty what will be just right and you will save him a most tedious packing and save yourself some express charges and the terrible disappointment and annoyance of writing back and saying: "Dear Sir: The lilies you sent me were fine plants, but I regret to say many of the flowers were bruised and useless. What are you going to do about it?"

William Scott.

NEPHROLEPIS PIERSONI.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of some fronds of Nephrolepis Piersoni, a sport from the Boston fern that originated with the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., three years ago. The photograph hardly does the subject justice, judging from the fronds sent us by Messrs. Pierson & Co. The pinnæ of the main frond subdivide, making perfect miniature fronds, producing a most graceful and beautiful effect. The fronds are broad and heavy and very full.

New Fern, Nephrolepis Piersoni.

The originators say the plant is exactly like the Boston fern as to growth, hardiness and general adaptability, and believe it will quickly supersede that well tried sort, on account of its beauty and general desirability. It will be introduced in the spring of 1903.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

During the past few weeks I have had several inquiries as to the best method of carrying roses over a second season.

This is a practice which I do not favor in the least, as from my own experience and that of numerous acquaintances who are expert growers, the results have been far from satisfactory. There are few growers of note who have not at some time tried it and if the experiments had been successful they would not go to the trouble of raising young stock, renewing their benches, etc., every year.

Circumstances sometimes compel a grower to carry over a house, but he rarely does it from choice. It is usually the inexperienced that has recourse to this method. When a house has been planted late, and the plants have only attained their best condition in March or April, it certainly looks as if they would be in the pink of condition for another season's work, and it seems a sacrifice of time and labor to throw them out and plant anew. Experience, however, tells us different.

The methods adopted by experts are many. One of the safest and easiest to carry out is to begin in June or early in July to gradually withhold water in order to ripen the wood and to get the roots as near to a dormant state as can be done with safety. They must never be allowed to become so dry as to wilt the soft wood, nor to shed their leaves or cause any injury to the fibrous roots.

During this period syringing will have to be carried on as usual to keep down spider; this will give nearly all the water they will require. If allowed to become too dry the soil will begin to crack, which it should not be allowed to do. In order to hasten the ripening process ventilation must be given freely night and day, and a close watch kept for the first signs of mildew. This treatment will usually ripen them sufficiently in three weeks or a month.

The small blind wood should then be carefully pruned out and as much of the surface soil removed as can be done without injuring the roots. A compost of one-third well rotted cow manure and two-thirds fibry loam should then be put on to replace that removed, taking care not to make it any deeper than it was before. Tie the strongest canes down to encourage the dormant eyes that are lower on the stem to break, water the bench until it is thoroughly soaked. After this soaking it can be allowed to become moderately dry until the eyes have started, and a healthy growth begins. Syringing twice a day during bright weather materially helps the eyes to push through. Night temperature should be as near 56 degrees as the season will allow, day temperature during bright weather 70 or 75 degrees.

After they are fairly started and growing vigorously a richer mulching can be applied. It is better to mulch lightly and frequently than to run any risks by putting it on too thick. With the exception of more care in watering as the days begin to shorten, they require the same treatment as young stock.

Grafting.

"Chas." writes: "In grafting Bride, Bridesmaid and Liberty on the Manetti you first pot the Manetti in 2½-inch pots. Should the Manetti then sprout or break some before ready for grafting? Should the scion for grafting be dormant, break or leaf or should the scion have one new shoot? What growth of wood makes the best scion?"

The root action of the Manetti stocks should be started previous to grafting. This will cause some of the eyes to break. These should be rubbed off when the scion is attached. The scion can be of either strong, well ripened blind wood, or flower stems of the same quality as used for cuttings, and should have all the new soft growth removed.

Carrying Roses Over.

J. W. M. writes: "We have a bench of roses, young plants set last June, that have not done very well during the winter but are now sending up fine strong shoots. One of the firm says to replant with young stock, the other advises to carry them over. What would you advise? The roses are mostly Brides, Woottons and Perles. They have been grown cool and yet the stems have been weak all winter. Why is it? Have had no mildew. Is there any way to get long stemmed Woottons? If you advise me to carry said bench over please give your plan for doing so."

Plants which have not done well during their first winter, however well they may look at present, are not likely to do any better if carried over. Young healthy stock planted early in June and properly cared for during the summer months will make plants by October that will give far more satisfactory results.

If the plants were of a weakly growth in the fall, the cool treatment would rather retard than encourage the development of strong stems during the winter. With the advent of spring the strong canes will naturally begin to put in an appearance.

To get long stems on Woottons, the night temperature should be 60 degrees, running up to 75 or 78 degrees with sun heat. They ought also to get periodical mulchings. A compost of two-thirds well decomposed cow manure and one-third good rose soil, with a generous sprinkling of bone flour thoroughly incorporated and spread on the bench one inch thick. They also delight in liquid food once a week during bright weather.

In seasonable hints during the coming season, which I will try to have from two to three weeks ahead of time, will be found directions for potting, planting, care of benches, etc.

J. W. M. will find the subject of carrying roses over treated in this week's seasonable hints. Ribes.

HARDY MONTHLY ROSES.

We would be very much pleased if you would let us know through your paper the best varieties of hardy monthly roses in all colors for the garden and cemetery such as La France. B. B.

The word monthly as applied to roses is not recognized as a proper term for any class, but is meant, usually, to mean those sorts that will give us flowers during every summer month. There are many beautiful roses that flower throughout the summer; but, alas, the winter in our northern and middle western states is too much for them, so in any list I could give, these would be of no avail. I would say now, as I have on other occasions, that there are many tea roses that are well worth growing for summer bloom even if you have to plant the young stock every spring, and with thorough protection they can be carried over winter.

There is first of all Cochet, pink and white; and the old, well-known tea roses of twenty years ago, which are beautiful in the summer months, particularly towards fall; Bon Silene, Safrano, Isabella Sprunt, Duchess Brabant, and many small-flowering tea roses which give a continuous bloom. The larger-flowering varieties which are now our choice forcing varieties are not satisfactory out of doors. Mermet, and its fine sport, Perle des Jardins, etc., give us but few flowers.

The grand class of roses called hybrid perpetuals, or remontants, do not warrant the name, for after their grand burst of bloom in June there is not much of anything after, so we will dismiss them. The hybrid teas have proved hardy under favorable circumstances, of which La France is a well-known type. The familiar Agrippina is a China and is quite hardy. The polyantha roses are beautiful and quite hardy. In conclusion I would say that to fill the bill and get what can be really called a hardy monthly rose I would rely on the hybrid teas. A list of them can be got from any reliable nurseryman.

THE ROSE CONVENTION.

At the rose convention to be held in Berkeley Lyceum Theater, 19 to 21 West 14th St., New York, Wednesday, March 12, by the American Rose Society, American Institute and the Horticultural Society of New York, the program includes the following papers: Best Garden Roses, by Dr. R. Huey; Hybrid Rose Stocks, by Dr. W. Van Fleet; Key to the Garden Classification of Roses, by L. Barron. There will also be a general discussion on new roses, together with various recitations, illustrated with stereopticon views of roses and other floral subjects.

The program will conclude at 5 p. m., for the regular annual meeting of the American Rose Society.

VIOLETS.

In our last we spoke about the soil for the violet; equally essential are the plants themselves. It is utterly useless to plant a house with anything but first-class stock; it is only time, labor and room thrown away, for unless they are strong and in every way healthy they will not be able to successfully combat the many insects and diseases that they are beset with on every hand. I speak of this now, even before taking up the house, as it is time that you were working up your stock if you expect to grow a crop next season. In our estimation, one thing is very important, viz., that the young stock should never stop growing from the time it leaves the propagating bed rooted, till in flower the next winter. Just as sure as they get stunted or hardened up (by this, I mean woody) just so sure you might as well throw them out as they will never pay to bother with and one cannot afford to waste room under glass if he is growing for profit.

It sounds foolish to keep reiterating that you must take stock from only the strongest and best of your stock plants, yet many seem to overlook this fact. Where it is possible you should have your eye on your stock plants from the commencement of the season, for you will see a great variation in plants, some going to runners, some to leaves, some to flowers early, and what you particularly want is the plant that in every way is good and gives you a good crop of first-class flowers for the holidays, for that is when you want them, and want them badly, and if you have what you want then you will have plenty at other times. If you will observe the plants closely from year to year you will find that there are many that devote all their energies to flowering late in the season when they are practically worthless; such should be discarded as stock.

If you have to buy your stock this season to start with, my advice would be to go and make a thorough personal inspection of several good growers' stock before placing your order, as for the reasons I have already given it is more than important that the stock should be A-1. If you have any good stock of your own, work it up as far as is consistent with health. Some growers buy some new stock every year, but my experience does not prove this advisable, at least for me, for I have never had such stock do nearly so well as my own, and we have had to grow it two or three years before it would equal ours. Therefore my advice is to always increase your own good healthy stock. If it is possible work up twice the stock that you expect to use. When planting you will find many that are not up to the standard for one reason or another, and you want to sort out the best to fill the house, and the other half you should plant in the field to have to fill vacancies that occur naturally during the summer. The balance of the field grown plants always find a ready market to the less fortunate grower or to some one who finds, last thing, that he has a spare house that he could grow some violets in if he only had the plants.

Don't think for a moment that when you have your house planted that it is all right for a few weeks, and that "the boy" can water it when it gets dry, and that you can attend to your spring trade, etc., for if you do you will find that you never made a bigger mistake. They will be more than dry when the boy thinks of them, or he gets time from running errands to water, and then he will not have the time or inclination to do it thoroughly nine times out of ten. And the weeds! yes, they will come up thick as the "hair on a dog" and grow twice as fast as the hair or violets. You must keep a watchful eye on the house from the minute it is planted; water heavily when you do water (not to make it soggy, but clear down) and keep the surface well cultivated with the little hand-scratcher, thus keeping the weeds down and saving all the strength for the plants. Don't step or lean on the dirt between rows for it will get all too much packed down before the year is up without any extra pressure.

You also want to go over the house about every week, as soon as they get established and get to growing, and carefully cut (not pull as many do) off the runners close to the crown of the plant, doing this often so that the strength goes to the crown and not to making a lot of useless runners to be destroyed.

OUR TRAVELS.

When you travel as far from home as western New York is from the fine city of Indianapolis it is altogether unwise to return home, even if you have a one-third rate, without seeing a few of the famous establishments of this vast and varied country that lies in the valley of the Mississippi and its tributaries, "The banks of the Wabash far away." So on our road to the sky scraping city, a number of us, to our great pleasure and profit, alighted from the Big Four car at the pretty little city of Lafayette.

This city is not all French because it bears the name of the great assistant; it is cosmopolitan, like all our cities. If you want the genuine American community you must join the Apache tribe or dwell in a rural village of Vermont, where a paler-faced type is found and where the female bovine is pronounced "kaew." But we are all Americans who are loyal to the country and behave ourselves, and we who make two blades of timothy grow where once the swamp held sway, and the pansy blossom in the rural garden, or increase the carnation from three and one-half to three and one-half and one-sixteenth are benefactors of our time and place, and therefore particularly good citizens, either of our native or adopted country.

Here dwells the "Karnation King," and like all really great monarchs whose memory will be blessed, he is as modest as great. But nothing I can say about this kind, good man will help him or me, for he is already well known. The four or five houses of seedling carnations, some first year and others second year trials, are a beautiful and interesting sight. Every shade of color that the dianthus allows is here, and yet with all these thousands of varieties it is but a very few that are worth sending out to supersede standard varieties; so raising seedlings is not all profit. It was in these houses that first unfolded the petals of many of the varieties that have made this place famous, marked an epoch in carnation growing and increased the revenue of many of us, and the good work is still going on.

Fine benches of the varieties being sent out this year can be seen. "Stella" is a beautiful flower of the Bradt type, and remarkably free. "Alba" is a finely formed, large white, with medium length of stem. "Apollo" is a fine looking, very bright scarlet, and "Dorothy Whitney" is a beautiful yellow. It is worthy of note that nearly all the varieties sent out by this firm have improved under other cultivators' hands. I don't infer from that that the originators don't know how to grow them. I mean rather that they are merely given plain treatment, and when extra cultivation is given they respond.

New Crimson Carnation Daheim.

All the leading standard varieties are grown here, more for the cuttings than the blooms, and the propagating house is, I should say, about ideal. It is twenty feet wide, equal span, running north and south, and a more healthy, robust lot of cuttings could not be found. Carnations are not all that is grown here. There is a store in the city and a general business to be supplied, so there are lilies and houses of smilax and asparagus and palms to be seen here, but we went to see carnations and the birthplace of that variety that made my name better known than it otherwise would have been.

After two hours delightfully spent under the guidance of Mr. Dorner, Sr., we were not allowed to escape till we assisted in clearing off the coverings of a bountiful table, where the best of coffee, the laugh of Miss Dorner and Mrs. Dorner, Jr., and the stories of Adam Graham, helped to lubricate everything, and our last promise was to Miss D. that if we heard anything really new or cute we were to forward it by United States Mail. William Scott.

NEW CRIMSON CARNATION "DAHEIM."

The illustration scarcely does justice to this grand seedling. In the first place the flowers, owing to a mistake, were overlong in transit and they were badly cared for before reaching us. This is a seedling in its third year. The parents are Bradt and Meteor. It has long stiff stems, robust, clean foliage, and the flowers are very large, perhaps one of the largest we know. The color is an illuminated crimson and maroon of a most pleasing tone.

Mr. W. C. Russell, the well known gardener of Millbrook, N. Y., is the originator, and considers it one of the best among the many varieties he is growing. He had quite a batch of it at the time of our visit and its appearance justifies the prediction that there is a bright future before it. Ivera.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

The action of the New York Florists' Club and the Kansas City people in publicly advertising their shows almost a year in advance is a highly commendable one, and is certain to have an excellent effect on the quality and number of the exhibits. The first principle of a flower show is, first of all, to get the finest possible flowers on exhibition. It is not possible to set up a poor lot of flowers and try to make the people believe it's the greatest show that ever was. The general standard of cut flowers is well known in all of our large cities, and exhibition flowers and plants have got to run much above that standard before the public will enthuse to any extent. When the grower gets his schedule far enough in advance of the exhibition to grow stock specially for it, and the premium list is such as to recompense him to a reasonable extent, the success of the show so far as exhibits are concerned is assured.

There have been discussions on the sameness of exhibits in the mum cut flower classes, and I note that the New York people have departed from the time honored rut of 12 white, 12 yellow, etc., and introduce classes for specific varieties. While this may come a little more expensive on the management, I believe it will pay, because it will certainly introduce more variety, and the task of the judges is rendered much easier. Any good judge can see at a glance the difference between two vases of the same variety; while if, say, Appleton, Falconer, and Bonnaffon, are set up for 12 yellows, the awards must be made largely on the judges' personal opinion; and it is small wonder that his opinion, and the opinions of the individual exhibitors, very often differ. Again with color scoring 25 points, a pale yellow of the Bassett color, has no chance against such a variety as Wedding with its deeper shade of color.

I note in the New York schedule under the classes of yellows, the name of Mme. Carnot. I assume that the variety of G. J. Warren is meant by this, though it would have been better possibly if the committee had stated this specifically, since there is another very pale variety, quite distinct from Warren, known as Mrs. W. Mease..

It is high time for intending exhibitors to be getting their stock into condition. Prize winning flowers are never cut from stock that is neglected and abused till the summer is half gone. Get your stock plants into a light airy house, and encourage them to throw up nice healthy suckers, the end of a carnation or violet house is an ideal place, but don't imagine you can leave your plants under a bench somewhere till after Easter and then get good cuttings.

In the case of varieties that you may need many plants of, and do not have much stock to work with, cuttings should be rooted right along, because they can be topped and stock increased considerably in this manner.

Where there is an abundance of stock plants the rooting of the young stock should be deferred until they can be grown right along and planted out, because young plants that are left lying around in small pots get potbound, hard and woody, and never start into growth satisfactorily when put out on the bench.

While the interest last fall was great in the main exhibitions, the interest this year will be even greater, unless I fail to read the signs of the times aright, and it behooves the growers to get in line and take advantage of the boom.

The enterprising florist is he who gets in on the ground floor and is never caught short in a rising market.

BUFFALO.

With three feet of snow, zero and a zephyr fanning our exposed parts at sixty miles an hour, our spirits dropped to such a low ebb that any gossip of our provincial town was out of the question. But things are better now and the ink is thawed out.

Business was much better in February than January, and is keeping up. There has been no lack of flowers of every sort. Carnations of medium quality are rather too plentiful.

We had a meeting of the Florists' Club a few days previous to our departure for Indianapolis and it was decided to hold our election, to be followed by a supper (banquets are only for Prince Henry), on the 7th. This is as it should be, and I hope sincerely that there will be a good attendance. Chapters could be written on the question, "Why are not our florists' or club meetings better attended?" The old chestnut is quoted continually that some member or some one should read "an interesting and instructive paper" at each meeting. This sounds good, but it is in most cases of little avail. The majority of the members will say, "Oh, bosh, what can he tell us that we don't know." I would not for a moment insinuate that a free lunch or free entertainment of any kind would bring out a larger attendance, for the majority of members are well able to buy that for themselves. It's merely in my opinion a selfish indifference, a lazy stay-at-home inclination, a want of loyalty to the calling they are engaged in.

If we could all have such a splendid meeting as that held in Pittsburg recently, where the evening was spent in learning the views of all the expert horticultural builders of the country, how proud we should be, and that was only one of many there.

There has been a great turn over in our park commissioners of late. The board of fifteen, a truly unwieldly number, who formed themselves into small political cliques, has been legislated out and a new board of five members appointed by the mayor. Five, if of the right kind, is surely enough, and it is now up to the five new gentlemen. My opinion of such a board is that one might be a high class civil engineer, one an architect, one an all round horticulturist, one a prominent lawyer, and the fifth a first-class business man.

In the retiring board and among our leading citizens a movement has begun to raise funds to erect a monument to our late park superintendent, William McMillan. Buffalo is honoring herself when she does this and the responses are already most gratifying. Many men who failed to see his great qualities while with us are now the readiest to do his memory honor. Nothing I can say of his ability, his absolutely pure and rugged honesty and entire devotion to his life's work, which is a monument to him, can enhance his good work, for they are now known by all thinking people. Pity 'tis that he could not have realized this while on earth.

Buffalo was represented at Indianapolis by a small delegation. There should have been at least two more. And the anxiety as to fuel supply was, I believe, the only cause of W. J. P. stopping behind. I suppose those that didn't go will be very willing to learn all there was to be gained by the show. Let them go and see for themselves and pay for it. It was a glorious convention, both professionally and socially. No such ideal quarters for the convention are likely to be met with till we go there again. And the men of Indiana are of a rare brand. The delay of trains getting the members and exhibits there was the only regrettable feature.

Gurney Hill is getting to be a facetious old joker and ought to be on the staff of Puck. And that Mr. Haugh, whose wittieisms bristled out in several places, is very hot stuff. I would like to know him better. And what's the matter with that level-headed man from Fort Wayne and his talented wife. Judge Vesey, that little luncheon and its environments will not soon be forgotten. If Carmody gives us much more of the infernal regions and his Satanic Majesty we shall begin to think (being somewhat of a Theosophist ourselves) that we have the real old Nick sojourning with us in a mild and attenuated form and that when he descends below (distant may the day be) that there will be volcanic eruptions and violent quakes in the region of Evansville.

It was good, sparkling, hospitable and jolly all around and worth thirteen times the price of the journey. For such gatherings we live, and all too soon we shall be unable to meet the congenial spirits we like and in whose company the brightest hours of our lives are spent. I would like to give every one of you a rub, but space forbids. The only other sad occurrence was that the glass of "sparkling" never reached as high up the table as Mr. Kennedy, of Rocky River, Ohio. W. S.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The market has fallen off a little. Last week finished badly, Saturday being a great day for the fakirs, who had a picnic with some stuff that was storm stayed in the commission houses. Still there was lots of good business done. This week the weather is better; March comes in quietly as a lamb after stormy February and at time of writing there was reason to expect a gradual improvement in volume of business until after Easter. Prices are falling and will further decline with warm, sunny weather. Special Beauties are more plentiful at from $6 to $7 per dozen; Brides and Maids, $10 to $12 per 100; carnations, choice, $3 to $4; good single violets, 30 to 50 cents per 100; good doubles, 50 to 75 cents per 100; Easter lilies, $10 to $15 per 100; valley, $3 to $4; sweet peas, 50 cents to $1 per 100.

These prices will give a general idea of what the best stuff brings. Now, if you want to see the bear side here is a glimpse: Double daffs one day, so much for the lot; if measured out in small quantities, 50 cents to $1 per 100—nice ones, too. Another day, pretty fair ones were hawked on the street at less than half above wholesale quotations. Again, 1,000 or more tulips La Reine, Rose Gris-de-Lin and Belle Alliance (of, it must be confessed, passe appearance) failed to tempt even a fakir. But let us draw the curtain; such things must be and it is only good to get a glimpse of them occasionally.

Some very fine white snapdragons were on a counter at S. S. Pennock's; splendid flowers for altar vases.

Blooming plants are becoming more plentiful, giving a pretaste of Easter, as it were. The store windows are gay with rhododendrons, spiraeas, genistas, primulas, tulips and daffodils in pans, and many others in pans.

A Commission House.

Edward Reid gave some interesting ideas on the development of his business a few days ago. His aim with carnations, his specialty, is to keep them under natural conditions. The flowers are put in a well ventilated room immediately on their arrival in jars of water. Under this treatment they last well. Mr. Reid believes a check in development is largely responsible for sleepiness. Among the flowers seen in this room were some fine Marquis, which now bring 6 cents. Regarding his customers, Mr. Reid said that he always treated an order entrusted to him exactly the same as if the buyer were present. Stock was selected for out-of-town buyers without extra charge, it being considered fairer to give these distant customers full benefit of the changes in the local market. Regarding the growers, no effort has been spared to encourage the production of fine stock, such stock always being held for full price. When a grower persistently sends poor flowers he is dropped.

School Lane.

Horticulturally speaking, the most interesting of the private places on School Lane is that of William Weightman, presided over by John McCleary. There are five narrow houses devoted to vegetables and four larger ones, including the conservatory, for plants and flowers. The winter vegetables are famous. Potatoes are grown both in pots and on the bench. The tops are kept trimmed and the potatoes carefully removed as they develop, enabling the smaller tubers also to reach perfection. Tomatoes are grown in pots and trained into an arbor. Three crops are secured for each batch of vines. Difficulty is sometimes experienced in inducing the fruit to set in midwinter. String beans are grown in the bench, supported by an original contrivance of adjustable wire on stakes. Cauliflower, lettuce, squash, cucumber, asparagus and melons are also successfully grown. Two beds of mushrooms under benches bore evidence of heavy yield.

Carnations are grown in variety. Of roses, Beauty, Bride and Maid, with some boxes of grafted Brunners in bud. A great variety of foliage and flowering plants is here, all bearing evidence of intelligent culture. The yellow Primula floribunda was very pretty, covered with its small bright blossoms.

Samuel S. Pennock delivered a case of ribbon at the Twenty-third and Race street freight station last week. The railroad company allowed the case to remain on the platform over night, where it was submerged, spoiling much of the contents. There seems good cause for recovery on the ground of negligence on the part of the company.

Mrs. W. G. Frey, of Roxborough, is dead.

The meeting of the club on Tuesday evening was devoted to a discussion on the best method of bringing out a new rose.

Bowling.

The Florists won two out of three games from the Alexis team in a Bowlers' League contest last week. The scores of the Florists follow:

Moss	112	105	136
Mooney	175	138	127
Moore	155	104	135
Dunham	147	172	149
Johnson	176	158	193
Team totals.	765	682	740

The Alexis team totals were 757, 756 and 684.

HEATING AND PIPING.

Our four houses are each 10x76, with no partition walls. The outside walls are 4 ft. in height and a potting shed runs across the west end of the houses. There is glass and a door in the east end of each house.

Our piping at present is not satisfactory. We know there is not sufficient pipe for this climate and expect to put in more when we remodel this summer and wish to do so to the best advantage.

At present we have two 2½-inch flows from boiler, rising about 6 ft., turning into a 2½-inch main, one at the boiler and one running about half way down the shed, and then turning into main, from which are five 2-inch flows which connect with the flows (2-inch) in each house. Would it be better to have 4-inch risers from boiler, and would one 4-inch be sufficient instead of the two 2½-inch? Then our returns are 2-in., 1½, 1¼ and one 4-inch return, most of them running into a 2½-inch return on one side of the boiler. Would it be better to have 4-inch returns, at least near the boiler? In repiping these houses we want to use as much of the present pipe as possible, and the new we put in we want to use 2-inch pipe.

Our boiler is rated to heat 1,600 to 1,900 feet of 4-inch pipe. Any information in regard to the arrangement of pipes in our houses will be acceptable.

H. & B.

In reply to H. & B. relative to the arrangement of hot water piping for the heating of their greenhouses, using 2-inch piping for the heating coils, I have indicated on the accompanying plan a simple, practicable and economical arrangement, which will give them the desired results. Their boiler, which they say is rated to heat 1,600 ft. of 4-inch pipe, if such rating is conservatively estimated, should readily heat this range of glass.

Trade Conditions for Feb. 23–28.

Not too good, but not much chance to lament under twentieth century rules of competition.

Bad weather during the larger part of the week bothered the arrival of all kinds of material more or less and interfered with outward shipments still more. But we will see a few poorer weeks before we find a better one.

Roses.—Prince Henry's visit making a market for the New York and Philadelphia supply of Beauties, caused a shortage for the Boston supply, but the New Hampshire and Natick crops are swiftly coming forward and will go far towards the decorations for his visit here, orders for which have already "Galvanized." Prices on good Beauties are running a little high to irregular buyers yet. Liberties and Meteors getting quite plentiful, especially in small sizes. Brides and Maids plentiful in large sizes only, but will come freely in all sizes after a very few fair days. Prices have a tendency to droop in view of the spring-like looks of things in general. Very few Perles, Morgans and Bon Silenes.

Pinks.—This line has not yet been especially overrun, but no scarcity has existed, except in the matter of cheap white ones temporarily. Prices rarely beat 4 cents for anything.

Violets.—It seems to me that the call for good ones is unusually good for the time of year. Poor ones are poor property and street men offer 15 cents per 100 for them without a blush.

Bulb Goods.—Just a bit inclined to be scarcer now, but no one knows what a day may bring forth.

Lilies.—Plentiful, both Easter and calla. Come and buy some.

Fine white flowers for funeral work in fairly good supply usually, as there is a little candytuft, a little spiraea, and a little stevia. Valley quite plentiful, but selling very well. Mignonette and all kinds of green coming freely.

We need a lift on the whole list of floral supply.

Stickfuls.

An accidental call upon Sim reveals his magnificent growth of single violets; plants half thrown out and replaced by thousands of small pots containing candytuft and stocks about an inch and a half high. Sim can show as well kept houses as any in the trade, no matter what the crop may be.

Robert Morris, rose grower to W. S Wilson, has leased the Smith greenhouses in Dover and will grow roses there for the Boston market. But I understand he will personally retain his present position with Mr. Wilson and hire for the Smith place. The oldest argument against this is where it says: "No man can serve two masters," and "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

Thieves accommodated Chas. A. Dane by breaking into his office and relieving him of tools, cigars, etc. But it takes more than this to ruffle his accustomed composure.

Robert Newsham, formerly foreman for T. J. Thrasher, of Avon, has entered the employ of Harry Baker of Campello, and James W. Nelson has taken his place in Avon.

P. L. Carbone attended the opera in New York Prince Henry evening. He speaks very enthusiastically of the decorations of American Beauty roses and wild smilax.

The New England contingent arrived too late at the western carnation exhibit, consequently did not surround the prizes as they otherwise surely would have done.

O. K. Gerrish, of Lakeville, Mass., sends out a circular calling attention to the fact that our Massachusetts legislature is likely to pass an act which will make any florist liable to a fine of from $25 to $200 for selling even one plant which has not been fumigated in some certain manner, probably by use of hydrocyanic gas. Mr. Gerrish is decidedly according to his initials in thinking so stringent a law unnecessary and a movement is on foot, by action of the directors on Park street, to petition for qualifications thereunto. The law is aimed primarily at shippers of diseased nursery stock. Had you not better drop in and sign said petition? J. S. Manter.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Wholesalers and retailers agree that last week was one of the worst from a business standpoint, and this notwithstanding the "princely' decorations. Towards the end of the week the glut of almost all kinds of flowers was appalling. Only through the sidewalk merchants was the congestion relieved. The very best lilies were selling at 4 cents, and violets reached the low water mark of $1 per 1,000 before the accumulation could be moved. The freshest and finest stock was in light demand at 50 cents per 100. Prices on all bulbous stock are frightfully low. Even carnations have suffered badly, and only the novelties hold their value, and roses, which were scarce and high priced when the week began, were to be had at almost summer prices when it ended.

Now that the cold weather has disappeared floods are devastating the towns and country around us.

Various Items.

The various decorations for the entertainment of the German prince will be described by another pen in these columns.

James Mallon's Sons made up many designs last week for the funeral of a local politician, one being a pall in which 15,000 lily of the valley were used.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club Monday evening the flower show will be the most important matter for discussion.

On Wednesday, March 12, the American Rose Society convention begins at Berkeley Lyceum Theater at 2 o'clock. The program is noted elsewhere in this issue.

J. W. Scallen will move over to the popular side of Broadway in May, directly opposite his present location.

Henry Schmutz, son of Louis Schmutz, has arranged to open a store on Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn, in time to catch the Easter trade.

Mr. James Dean is dabbling in local politics and has been elected president of his borough, Freeport, where he now resides.

The sick are recovering. Mr. Coyle, of Ghormley's, fortunately escaped pneumonia, as did Mr. Donlan. Albert Wadley has at last recovered sufficiently to go to his home at New Rochelle.

The weather at this writing is clear and spring-like, but the first robin has not yet appeared.

The greenhouses of John Scott, Brooklyn, were flooded last week and considerable damage done to his Easter stock.

Bowling.

The semi-annual meeting of the Bowling Club will be held at the alleys next Monday at 3 p. m. and a full attendance is desired, as arrangements concerning the contest at Asheville will be considered.

Following are the scores made last Monday evening:

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Today (Monday, the 3d) is Prince Henry day in our city and everybody seems fairly busy. Business for the past week was as good as could be expected for this time of the year, though if it were not for the large amount of funeral work it could be called dull. The West End florists, of course, miss the large weddings and receptions, but are kept in practice by a few dinner and luncheon decorations. Commission men report that shipping trade has fallen off somewhat since the beginning of Lent.

Roses in all classes are very plentiful and of an improved quality. The glut is on, good and strong, except in Beauties, for which there is a good demand at $2 and $3 per doz., and extra choice stock goes as high as $4. The great bulk of the short stuff is selling at from 50 cents to $1 per doz. The smaller varieties such as Brides, Maids, Gates and Meteors sell in bulk at $10 per 1,000, but the best of them bring from $2 to $5 per 100. Perles and Woottons find but little call and a great many of them go to waste.

Carnations are now very fine, and the supply greatly exceeds the demand. Large lots were disposed of at the three commission houses at $7 in thousand lots; in small lots of one hundred the price was from $1 to $2. Fine Lawson, White Cloud, Bradt, Crocker, Marquis, Enquirer and other well known varieties went begging at the above prices, and no doubt this will continue for the next week or so. Any kind of white sold well.

Bulb stuff in almost every variety is very slow. Daffs are a perfect drug, and can hardly be given away; same may be said of valley, Romans, paper whites and freesias. Tulips have a fairly good call and are bringing from $2 to $3 per 100. Dutch hyacinths are selling slowly. Harrisiis are not overplentiful and are moving well at $12.50; callas are very plentiful, but are selling well for funeral work at 75 cents per doz.

Violets are in the same boat with the rest. They are very plentiful and $2.50 per 1,000 is all they bring. Some very fine doubles sell at from 50 cents to $1 per 100. Quite a lot of Californias had to be dumped the past week. Very little change in the green market. Smilax is slow at $12.50; asparagus and adiantum are only in fair demand.

The growers are all busy now preparing their Easter stock. Lilies are looking well, but from reports pot plants are going to be very scarce. Mr. Tesson and C. C. Sanders will have some fine Easter plants of all kinds except Harrisiis. Beyer, Schray and Fillmore, too, will be well supplied with all kinds of Easter stock for which they expect a good demand.

Notes.

Mr. S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia, is in town talking up the Nelson carnation and telling what those missed who failed to attend the meeting at Indianapolis.

Paul Berkowitz, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co. of Philadelphia, stopped over a day on his way home from the far west.

Ellison & Tesson furnished all the floral decorations for the breakfast given Prince Henry at the St. Louis Club Monday morning. The decorations were extensive and were much admired.

August Schuerman, of the Schuerman Floral Co., decorated the city hall and union station for Prince Henry's visit last Monday morning.

The next meeting of the club will be held on Thursday, March 13, and will be a notable one. President Meinhardt desires a full attendance. The exhibition of cut roses, new and standard varieties, promises to be large, and Messrs. Ammann and Fillmore have their rose essays ready for this meeting.

The following resolutions, which were adopted at last meeting, show the esteem in which the late Charles Connon was held by his fellow-members:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to take from our midst our much beloved fellow craftsman, Charles Connon, and while bent with sorrow we humbly acknowledge His holy will; therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of our fellow craftsman the club has lost a faithful worker, and we, the members, a loving and sincere friend; and be it further

Resolved, That as a small token of our respect and love for his good character and true devotion to his family and business and the welfare of those associated with him that a copy of these resolutions be engrossed and presented to his family; and be it further

Resolved, That we extend to them our heartfelt sympathies as a body in this their hour of sad bereavement.

J. F. AMMANN,
F. C. WEBER,
J. J. BENEKE,
Committee.

The members also extended their sympathy to Mr. Fillmore in the loss of his mother.

Bowling.

The bowlers lost two games last week to the World's Fair team. John Sturtz is back in the game, but could not save us. Charlie Kuehn was in fine form, averaging 206 in the three games. His big single game of 248 won him a pair of trousers. A. Y. Ellison, our usual high man, was not in good condition.

Six more games remain to be played to end the league race of 66 games, and third place is about where we shall land.

The scores for Thursday night were as follows:

Florists.	B.	E.	1	2	3	Total.	Aver.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Stock during the past week was plentiful, almost to an alarming degree, especially in second and third grades. The better grades met a fair demand and shipping trade helped out much, being very good. The street faker proved to be rather a welcome customer at the wholesale houses, and I might add that if it had not been for them there would have been much larger consignments to the ash barrel. I believe that the fakers do far less harm to our business than most retailers would be willing to admit.

In roses, Maids were in greatest supply, the best bringing 5 to 6 cents; medium grades, 3 to 4 cents, and ordinary ones from $1 to $2 per 100. Brides were in fair supply only, and brought better prices, from 2 to 6 cents. They are used in funeral work to a great extent which helps to keep up the price of the poorer grades. Meteors were much in excess of the demand and 6 cents for the best down to $1 per 100 and even less for short stock was the best to be got for them. With the exception of short stemmed ones, Beauties were scarce, and the price was well sustained. Short ones realized 50 cents to $1.50 and $2 per dozen. A few Liberties were easily disposed of, as the supply of this popular and-going-to-be-more--o rose is very small. A few Golden Gates sold fairly well at from 4 to 8 cents.

Carnations were the best stock, but even they would move but slowly except at reduced prices. Fancies were hard to sell at 4 cents, but closed out well at 3 cents. Ordinary grades $1.50 to $2, white bringing the top figure. Some poor grades could reach but 50 cents per 100, but this was caused more by split calyxes than anything else. A good many varieties are beginning to split badly, and this defect reduces their value fully one-half.

Bulbous stock was in fair demand only, but there was nothing lacking in the supply. The prices obtained were about normal, but considerable stock found its way to the dump, especially Von Sion and jonquils. White tulips and Dutch were most called for and brought 4 cents.

There is plenty of smilax, A. plumosus in bunches and strings, A. Sprengeri in bunches, ferns, galax leaves, etc. Leucothoe sprays at 50 cents per 100 are having a fine call and are being used to good advantage by most of the retail men.

Various Items.

Congratulations are in order. It's a ten-pound boy, and George Myers is the proudest papa in all Cincinnati. We all wish his newly arrived "family" the best of fortune and good health.

Geo. Murphy's family of small children, who have been sick most of the winter, are now recovering nicely, and George is beginning to feel more like himself again. He says his carnations are now looking first-class, and from present prospects there will be a good crop for Easter.

Thomas Windrau, father of Tom Windrau, of Fort Thomas, Ky., died suddenly last week.

John Critchell, brother of Park Superintendent B. P. Critchell, is reported to be very sick. At present he is in Florida for his health.

It might be well to remember that all the seedling prizes at the Indianapolis meeting of the Carnation Society were taken by seedlings originated by Mr. Richard Witterstaetter, of this city.

A party of Richmond, Ind., people, including Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lemon and Mr. Joe Hill, visited this city last Friday. They traveled in a private car (nothing is too good for Indiana folks) and their trip was one of pleasure and sight seeing.

Julius Baer had an especially attractive window decoration last Saturday. It consisted of Princess of Wales violets in profusion, violet baskets and silk cords. It was greatly admired by the throngs of people who passed by.

Mr. P. Fisher, of Ellis, Mass., and Mr. Patten, of Boston, were callers.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held February 27, President William Scott in the chair. M. C. Beardsley, of White Plains, was elected to membership. Dr. Horace Enos and C. J. Quimby, of White Plains, and Peter McDonald, of Irvington, were proposed.

Mr. Francis Gibson exhibited a vase of Bride and Bridesmaid roses and fifty Lady Hume Campbell violets and plant in bloom of Lady Campbell violets, all of which received honorable mention.

F. R. Pierson Co. offered a silver cup, value $25.00, to be competed for at the November show, for the best 24 blooms of 8 varieties of 3 each and must be selected from the following varieties: Merza, H. J. Jones, Lady Roberts, Minnie Dils, Kate Broomhead, Miss Alice Byron, Mrs. Barkley, Nellie Pockett, Mrs. Elmer D. Smith, Col. D. Appleton, A. J. Balfour, Mrs. Coombs, Florence Molyneux and Mrs. Tranter.

The by-laws were changed so as to admit to honorary membership people of means willing to assist the society financially by a liberal fee. F. R. Pierson was unanimously elected the first life member of this society, and A. L. Don, of New York City, was also elected the first honorary member. The executive committee was empowered to incorporate the society.

The essay written by Mr. James Donald, entitled "The Friends and Enemies of Our Gardens, Farms and Forests," was read by Vice-President David McFarland, it being impossible for Mr. Donald to be present.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Conditions have changed very materially since last week. The supply has shortened up to a marked degree and this, together with a somewhat increased demand, has put an entirely different complexion on things. Good stock is not at all plentiful and prices have stiffened a good deal. The range on tea roses is $4 to $8, with a tendency to go higher on the best. On carnations the range is from $1 to $3, with only the poor quality colored at the lower figure and the bulk of the good stock bringing $2 to $2.50; and anything really fancy will readily reach $3. These were the conditions on Tuesday. On Wednesday the sun was shining brightly and conditions seem favorable for an increase in the supply, though we hear of many growers who are now off crop, and this is given as one reason for the shortage in supply early this week.

Various Notes.

P. J. Hauswirth had the decoration for the banquet to Prince Henry at the Auditorium, and the effect was very handsome. The table was in the form of a triangle, with all the guests seated on the outside. In the center was a fountain encircled by Harrisii lilies and interspersed with croton and other fancy foliage. Near the inner edge of the table were the German and American flags in carnations while facing them was an eagle of daffodils. On the table the flowers used were all orchids, mainly cattleyas, laelias and cypripediums. Palms were grouped about the room and on the walls festoons of wild smilax held up balls of carnations.

For the ball the Auditorium was decorated by Friedman, palms and wild smilax being the materials used.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. had the decoration for the luncheon at the Germania Club, and palms and other decorative plants were very freely used.

Walter Kreitling decorated the car for the trip to Milwaukee, and made it a bower of American Beauty roses.

The retailers recently effected an organization known as the Retailers' Protective Association, with John Schubert, president; Jos. Craig, vice-president; Lee Walz, secretary; A. McAdams, treasurer. The aim is to act together in suppressing the red violet industry and to keep the streets clear of the basket men.

Now the wholesalers have formed an organization and, while we have no definite report, we understand that an attempt will be made to establish a bottom price below which none will sell. This is to be changed from time to time as circumstances dictate. This is an attempt to do away with the awful price cutting that takes place in times of heavy glut, and will certainly be a good thing for all in the trade if it can be carried out, as the only one who has really profited by these very low prices in the past has been the street man.

Clifford Pruner is now in the supply department at McKellar & Winterson's.

Kennicott Bros. Co. say shipping trade is holding up remarkably well, and that Lent seems to affect business less and less each year.

John Degnan, of the McKellar & Winterson Co., left Tuesday night for a trip to New York and Boston.

Bowling.

Last Tuesday evening the Growers won two from the Wholesalers and the latter one from the former, while the Retailers collected three from the Miscellaneous. The scores follow:

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The past week trade was rather slow. Plenty of flowers such as Dutch hyacinths, tulips, Harrisii lilies and carnations. Roses are coming in very fine, such as Maids and Brides.

The weather don't seem to be with the florist. On Friday evening a terrific storm swept over the city and lots of hail with it, but no damage was done to any of the greenhouses. Easter stock is looking very fine. The florists who attended the carnation show are complimenting the Indianapolis florists for their hospitality.

Jos. Coenen & Co. had a fine skating pond which formed in front of their office, which was enjoyed by ladies and gentlemen at night. Mr. John Bohrman being the manager of the affair.

Jacob Schulz is very much pleased with the carnation show and thinks he will have a Lawson or Empire State some day.

William Mann says he will try his luck and get a wonder in the way of a new carnation. The boys wish him good luck.

C. H. Kunzman's place is looking in tip top shape for Easter. Lookout for him for Easter. He will be right in it.

Nanz & Neuner report a very satisfactory shipping trade.

Simon Pontrich is adding another new house to his establishment on Twenty-eighth and Greenwood avenue.

H. Lichtefeld.

IRON ROOF AND BOILER.

What would it cost to put an up-to-date iron roof on an old greenhouse, 50 feet long, 15 wide, 11 at ridge, 4 at eaves, 2 feet of which is glass? South aspect, north wall stone, the house to be used for roses.

What would a first class hot water boiler cost, one large enough to run two more houses same length on same level without driving hard?

Subscriber.

It would be somewhat difficult to answer Subscriber's questions definitely in these columns, as so much depends upon the details of construction and methods pursued in the erection and finish of such details. I would say, however, approximately, that he should be able to construct a good, modern iron frame roof on the building in question for from $550 to $650, the accurate cost depending, of course, on the special features existing in connection with such work.

A first class hot water boiler with sufficient power to heat two such houses easily, could be purchased at from $150 to $180, depending upon the particular make of boiler selected. When subscribers desire accurate information as to costs, such information could be secured more promptly and with more accuracy by corresponding direct with manufacturers of such goods advertising in the trade columns of this paper, than through the correspondence columns.

MIGNONETTE.

Many growers of this popular flower will be glad to learn something about the fine new variety called "Marvellous," now being offered by Henry F. Michell. This variety originated with John Cullen, who manages the greenhouses of Percival Roberts at Peneoyd. This grower is always an important factor at the shows of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society. He started with seed of Allen's Defiance mignonette and after three years of careful selection and crossing a new strain was evolved bearing wonderfully large flowers. So popular is this strain becoming with those who have seen it that the flowers are no longer being cut but every effort is being made to get enough seed to supply the demand.

KALAMZOO, MICH.

Since my last letter we have been having most excellent weather, which is helping crops very materially. Carnations, while not by any means scarce, are not keeping pace with the demand. The same may be said of roses. Prices remain firm. The demand for violets for Valentine's day was unprecedented. Washington's Birthday made quite a little stir, the demand for that day being satisfactory.

We are all trying hard to make a good Easter showing and from present indications we will get there. Visitors: S. S. Skidelsky, Philadelphia, and A. Rolker, New York. Ribes.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Henry Eichholz, Waynesboro, Pa., registers the following geraniums: J. D. Eisele, single zonal, color wine red; James Davidson, single zonal, color true lilac—the first approach to a blue geranium; Jupiter, Mars type, scarlet; Venus, Mars type, pale salmon.

In the list of state vice-presidents recently furnished to the press, the name of Theodore Wirth, of Hartford, Conn., was inadvertently omitted. Mr. Wirth is superintendent of the park system of the city of Hartford and the S. A. F. interests of Connecticut are safe in his care. Wm. J. Stewart, Secretary.

Fall River, Mass.—Business has not been what it ought to be, but is beginning to improve. Mr. C. Warburton didn't reach Indianapolis with his Cressbrook in time to stage them, but he wasn't the only one. A greenhouse 90x26 is to be erected at the city cemetery. Thos. W. Weathered's Sons, New York, have the contract.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Last Friday and Saturday we had the heaviest snow fall since 1888. The flower stores report a good business, considering Lent. A. Brennemann, our leading florist, lost about 400 of his best Easter lilies by freezing. Charles Smith, 3d and Walnut streets, has remodeled his store, put in a new ice box, etc., and now has everything fixed up in grand style.

JOHNSON & STOKES, 217-219 Market St., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

LONDON, ONT.

Fine, bright weather for the past two weeks is the excuse for the surplus stock and drop in prices. Forty-eight hours' rain has taken away all the beautiful, which for the past two months has completely covered Mother Earth and made an ideal Canadian winter.

The sudden death of two of London's most estimable citizens in the persons of Postmaster Browne, who was secretary of the Western Fair for a number of years, and Medical Superintendent Bucke, of the Asylum for Insane, kept local florists busy for a day or two with funeral work. Bulb stock is plentiful and to see the prices at which some of it is being sold one wonders where the profit comes in.

Much sympathy is felt for F. Dicks, who lost his wife on Feb. 1. She leaves four small children, one only two weeks old.

At Gammage & Sons, Bride, Maid and Gate in their new range are in excellent condition and some fine stuff is being cut. Beauties have not done so well, probably owing to late planting, the houses not being ready to plant until August 1, which is too late for Beauties. Carnations have done well all season. Amongst whites it is a toss between Lorna and Glacier. Glacier is the largest and purest white, while Lorna has stem and is very prolific. Mrs. Lippincott, a light pink, is thought much of and will displace all light pinks excepting Morning Glory. Marquis is considered the best in its class and all such varieties as Scott, Victor, Lord and Crocker, will be dropped to make room for it. Their stock of palms, Easter lilies, azaleas, etc., is in good shape and will be in evidence at Easter.

LOND.

WAUKESHA, WIS.—John Grape, of this city, has received a check for $25.00 from W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., in payment for the name "Early Stonehead" he suggested for their new cabbage. Indications are that we shall have a very good plant trade here this spring.

OMAHA.

Florists' Club Bowling Social.

The past week has been rather quiet among our florists, although of more than usual stir socially.

Thursday, Feb. 27, about twenty-five florists gave way to an evening of enjoyment and all congregated at the Vienna alleys for a bowling social, twenty partaking in the bowling for the following premiums:

Gilt-framed, bevel-edged mirrors for the lucky man on winning side, which was taken in by our old standby Mr. A. Donaghue, Sr., who was on the winning side and proudly drew out the winning number on a drawing by this side. George Swoboda did himself proud and took in two tons of coal donated by a coal company, also a box of fine cigars put up by Omaha Box Company for most strikes, he having highest average and most strikes. J. J. Hess got in on most spares on the deciding game between he and Mr. Ellsworth, receiving a box of cigars put up by Mr. Swoboda, and a florist's knife put up by Mr. S. B. Stewart. Mr. Raber took home a florist's knife given by W. W. Barnard & Co.'s representative, Mr. Ringier, who was present through the fracas. Henry Peterson, of Florence, was lucky man in receiving a pair of rose shears put up by Mr. Lewis Henderson, for second lowest score.

During the bowling a lunch was served, to which all did ample justice, for who can be without a good appetite during a bowling contest? After the contest between the Reds and Blacks, the Northsiders and Southsiders played one game, and a lively one, too; there was blood on the moon all the time.

The scores:

REDS.			BLACKS.
Hadkinson	125	143	Swoboda	154	157
Sanford	86	131	Ringier	149	150
Faulkener, Sr.	127	155	Zimmer	140	136
Adams	101	99	Henderson	123	134
Wilcox	158	134	Ellsworth	117	123
Hess	160	132	Faulkner, Jr.	131	117
Tauchnitz	101	153	Goedeke	63	93
Floth	131	73	Bath	135	135
Donaghue, Sr.	118	127	Peterson	67	89
Sorenson	101	99	Raber	61	102
	1208	1246		1140	1211

SOUTHSIDERS.
Faulkner, Sr.	Bath.
Ellsworth.	Faulkner, Jr.
Hadkinson.	Davey.
Wilcox.	Henderson.
Raber.	Goedeke.
NORTHSIDERS.
Zimmer.	Tauchnitz.
Hess.	Sanford.
Sorenson.	Peterson.
Adams.	Donaghue.
Floth.	Swoboda.

ST. PAUL.

The Market.

The third week of Lent has been one of the best on record for the trade in this city. The demand has been extra good and everything salable has gone.

The cut has been above the normal, but has hardly kept pace with the demand. There has been a good sale for plants also, especially azaleas, Dutch hyacinths, hydrangeas and anything in bloom or showing color.

If more of the growers would bring some plants into bloom from New Year's to Easter it would relieve the congestion at the Easter rush. Better prices could be maintained, everybody, buyer and seller, would be better satisfied, and best of all the buying public would appreciate our goods more than they do now and would look upon them as an every day necessity rather than a holiday luxury.

Easter is but four weeks distant, and already preparations are being made by churches and others for elaborate decorations for that event. Unless there should be very severe weather the Saintly City florists will have a good supply of seasonable plants for the occasion. Lilies are not plentiful, but are well along and should all be got into bloom in time. Azaleas, spireas, hydrangeas and roses are quite abundant and of very good quality. Bulbous stock is plentiful and should sell to very good advantage. There will be the usual supply of cut flowers.

Every one has been kept busy of late with the travelers, who have come singly, in pairs, and in swarms. We recall the following, though there may be others whom we have unintentionally overlooked: C. Keur, Mr. Van der Vors, H. J. Goemans, the representative of Veldhuyzen, Von Zanten & Co., and one or two others from Holland; H. A. Hagemann, Jos. Rolker, Mr. Ward, Mr. McHutchison, Martin Reukauf, E. M. Parmelee of the Allan Seed Company, Pictou, Ont., and H. E. Philpott, of Winnipeg. X. Y. Z.

POT CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Subscriber asks: "Which are the best chrysanthemums for pot culture, in assorted colors?" The easiest to grow are the following:

Early.

White—Polly Rose, Midge, Ivory, Bergmann. Yellow—Harry Hurrell, Walter Molatsch, Miss M. M. Johnson, October Sunshine. Pink—Pink Ivory, Glory of the Pacific.

Midseason and Later.

White—Mrs. H. Robinson, Mutual Friend. Yellow—Mrs. E. D. Smith, Sunstone, Golden Trophy, W. H. Lincoln. Pink—Mrs. Perrin, L. Boehmer, Mizpah. Red—G. W. Childs. Art.

We have received from Messrs. Osman & Co., London, England, a copy of their catalogue of requisites for florists, nurserymen, seedsmen, etc. It contains 170 large pages and it is astonishing what an immense number of items are included. They range from complete greenhouse plants down to pins and twine. The list of tools of all kinds is especially complete, and there are insecticides and apparatus for applying them without number. The illustrations are very numerous and it is quite a picture book.

ADVERTISING BY RETAILERS.

I would like a little light on the problem of advertising by the retailer. Do you consider the daily papers a good medium? If so, how would you handle them—by space, reading notices or classified advs.? S. F. C.

[We would be pleased to hear from other retailers on this subject. From various examples and clippings that have been sent us we would judge that in the large cities the retailers rely almost wholly upon very finely printed and specially designed announcements issued at favorable times during the year, such as the opening of the winter season, the holidays, Easter, etc. We have noted display advs. in theater and other programs, but have never heard any florist specially recommend them. In the smaller cities more dependence seems to be placed upon reading notices in the local newspapers. We are inclined to believe that few retail florists have as yet done much in the way of systematic advertising of any kind. And any other sort is not apt to show much in the way of results. If you are going to do anything in this line map out a campaign and then put it into execution. Spasmodic advertising is rarely profitable in developing permanent trade. We hope to hear from retailers who have had experience in the advertising matter.—Ed.]

According to a report of a committee of the American Park and Outdoor Art Association, fifty years ago no municipality in the United States had purchased an acre of land for park purposes, while now the cities of the country have 75,000 acres of land in parks and expend $11,000,000 annually in their improvement and maintenance. And this amount is only about two per cent. of the total expense account of our cities.

SOME BANQUET STORIES.

At the banquet to the American Carnation Society at Indianapolis some very entertaining stories were told by the various speakers. Mr. William Scott, as usual, had the banner collection. One was about the illness and death of an individual who was considered of such importance in his community that bulletins were displayed on the village church. The concluding bulletins read as follows: "Brother Jones growing weaker." "Brother Jones has died and gone to heaven." A local wag happened along and added an additional bulletin, reading: "Great excitement in heaven. Brother Jones not arrived." Another told of two bad boys who pasted two leaves of the Bible together where the minister had placed his bookmark, so that when the aged dominie read his text he was made to read as follows: "And Noah's wife was 60 cubits long and 40 cubits wide and lined inside and out with pitch."

In introducing Mr. Carmody Mr. Hill told the story of the pilgrim who visited the lower regions, and who was surprised at the entire absence of Irishmen, until informed by Beelzebub that there were lots of them there, but they were kept in a separate place, because they were too green to burn.

Mr. Carmody said he had personally visited the infernal regions, and related a conversation he had had with his Satanic Majesty, in which it appeared that the latter was planning to secure Mr. J. C. Vaughan as business manager. It seems that Mr. Carmody was allowed to return from the hot corner only because Beelzebub believed that he was constantly bringing souls to his dominion through the aggravation caused to mortals by his "bilers and ventilatin' contrapshins."

Mr. Marquisee, in response to a reference to his baldness, said that baldness was not a sign of age. In fact, the youngest person he had ever seen was quite bald.

But there was a serious as well as humorous side to the program. Mr. Marquisee, whose toast was "The Carnation of the Future," spoke of the complete realization of the prediction made by Mr. John Thorpe many years ago, and told of the directions in which progress may be looked for in the future.

Mr. Thorpe said his ideal had been reached in a shorter time that he anticipated. He thought there were great possibilities in the carnation as a pot plant, and suggested that the society would do well to offer premiums for well grown and bloomed plants in pots, and thereby stimulate progress in this direction. He said that at the Kansas City show next fall the sum of $1,000 would be offered in premiums for carnations.

The title page for our special spring number, to be issued March 20, is the most beautiful and artistic design ever used by any trade paper.

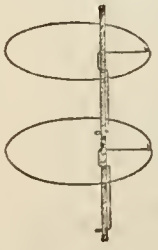
TESTIMONIALS.



From the Gross Florist Co., St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 6, 1902. "Your Wire Tendrils have given perfect satisfaction and shall order more as soon as needed. Will recommend them to all florists."

From Bell Miller, Springfield, Ill., Jan. 17, 1902. "We are perfectly satisfied with the Tendrils and find our carnations do better and are much easier handled with them. We think they are the best thing of the kind in the market and shall want more next fall, which is the best we can say for them. Have given your address to many florists." OUR NEW PONDEROSA LEMON

Photograph of a Ponderosa Lemon Plant, 18 months old, 12 inches high bearing two monster lemons, weighing 3 to 4 pounds each. This was grown in an ordinary living room.

Our parent plant is 4 years old, 6 feet high, with 20 odd branches about 2 to 3 feet in length and has at the present time over 300 young lemons set. The bloom on a strong plant is as large as a tube rose and has the true orange or citron flavor. When in bloom it is a sight worth seeing.

Is what we claim for it: The Largest, Freest Blooming, Fruiting and Most Delicious of all Lemons.

HERE IS WHAT ONE CUSTOMER DID WITH IT:

STURGEON BAY, WIS., Oct. 10, 1901.

"It may interest you to hear how I succeeded with my Ponderosa Lemon. I bought a young plant of you in the Spring of 1900. When it came it was scarcely 4 in. high, a mere slip, and I said to myself I would like to see this wee plant bear fruit of any size. I planted it in a pot in good garden soil, kept it well watered, gave it all the sun possible, took it in our sitting-room in the Fall, temperature 60 to 80, it grew quite fast for such a small plant. Imagine my surprise after I had it about a year to have my little boy running to me saying the lemon was in bloom, and sure enough it was; fine, large clusters of beautiful fragrant flowers scenting the whole room. It set 25 lemons but while they were quite small I pinched all but two off; the enclosed photograph shows to what enormous size the fruit has grown. The largest one will weigh 4 lbs. and the smaller one 3½ lbs. They are just beginning to ripen. This is certainly a grand fruit. The Ponderosa Lemon is certainly a wonderful fruit and I would not part with mine for many times what I paid for it."

Yours truly,

WM. A. SANDERSON.

HEATING.

I have three houses and a sash lean-to. One, 18x60, I would like to heat to 65 degrees at night during zero weather. Another, 12x60, and one 11x60, with 6-foot sash lean-to added without partition, I would like to heat to 50 degrees at night in zero weather. Houses run north and south, walls 4 feet high.

Kindly tell me how many pipes are needed and arrangement of same, 1¼-inch pipe to be used. Also if cast iron sectional boiler is as good as a steel tubular. And will steam or hot water be best? T. H. P.

There is little preference to be given either to steam or water, for the heating of so small a range, but if he has any idea of extending his glass area I would suggest steam as being the most desirable for his use.

A cast iron sectional boiler would be well suited for this small range, and in view of possible extensions, I would suggest that the boiler be so arranged that additional sections can readily be added at any future time to care for a reasonable extension of his glass.

He has specified using 1¼-inch pipe. This is not a desirable size for steam heating for houses of this description, but I assume he has this pipe on hand and desires to use it, in which case nine lines should be used in the 18-foot house for 60 to 65 degrees, and in the other houses, to insure 50 degrees, five lines in the 12-foot house, four in the 11-foot and two in the 6-foot house.

In the steam heating for greenhouses it is not desirable to make up the coils of pipes larger than 1¼-inch under ordinary circumstances, but where one has larger pipes and desires to use them up, they can be arranged to work with a reasonable amount of satisfaction, but not with the economy which the small pipes will admit. Henry W. Gibbons.

New York.

VENTILATING SASH.

At the Indianapolis convention of the American Carnation Society Mr. A. Rasmussen, New Albany, Ind., exhibited a model of a new ventilating sash which swings from the center, so that when open half of the sash extends above the roof and half into the house. Both sash and the frame in which it swings are to be of malleable cast iron. Being pivoted in the center the force required to open and close the ventilator is reduced to the minimum. It seemed to possess several advantages over the usual method.

Marquette, Mich.—Mrs. L. H. Stafford will build two new houses this season, to cover a space 40x115 feet. They will be thoroughly modern structures.

Now is the time to send advs. for our special spring number to be issued March 20.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Everything seems to be moving along at a good rate, with very little difference in the situation than when I wrote my last notes. Clear, cold weather has largely prevailed and has been a large factor in keeping business brisk in all quarters. Valentine's day failed to create much of an increase in sales. Mrs. Edgar reported a heavy sale on violets, but she seems to have handled the bulk of them, for there were few sold by the other florists.

A department store sold 5,000 carnations at two cents a piece last Saturday, but as they did not wrap them up and the thermometer stood 10 degrees above zero, the flowers didn't last very long after they reached the street.

Rumor has it that this same department store will open a permanent cut-flower department in the near future.

Prices so far have not been affected by Lent, and hold up to last figures with exception of tulips, which only bring $3 for the best.

Mr. Louis Asmussen passed through on his way home to Clear Lake, Iowa, from G. M. Kellogg's place at Pleasant Hill. Mr. Asmussen says everything is looking well at Mr. Kellogg's place, despite the thrips. He also said their bench grown carnations were making some fine blooms. John H. Vesey.

RICHMOND, VA.

In the floriculture statistics from the census of 1900 Virginia ranks twenty-fifth among fifty states, with 56 establishments and sales of $196,990.

Richmond, or Henrico county, heads the state with 14 establishments, occupying 131 quarter acres of ground and sales aggregating $77,716, which is considerably more than one-third of the state's floriculture products. Louisa county, the violet district, ranks second, with 20 establishments, 51 quarter acres of land, and sales, $18,631.

This leaves Norfolk third, with 4 establishments, 33 quarter acres of land, and sales of $15,286. The combined sales of these counties almost aggregate two-thirds of the entire state's showing.

Sherman, Tex.—Mr. H. O. Hannah lost a few lights of glass by hail, February 19. He was fully insured in the Florists' Hail Association. That organization now insures upwards of 15,000,000 square feet of glass.

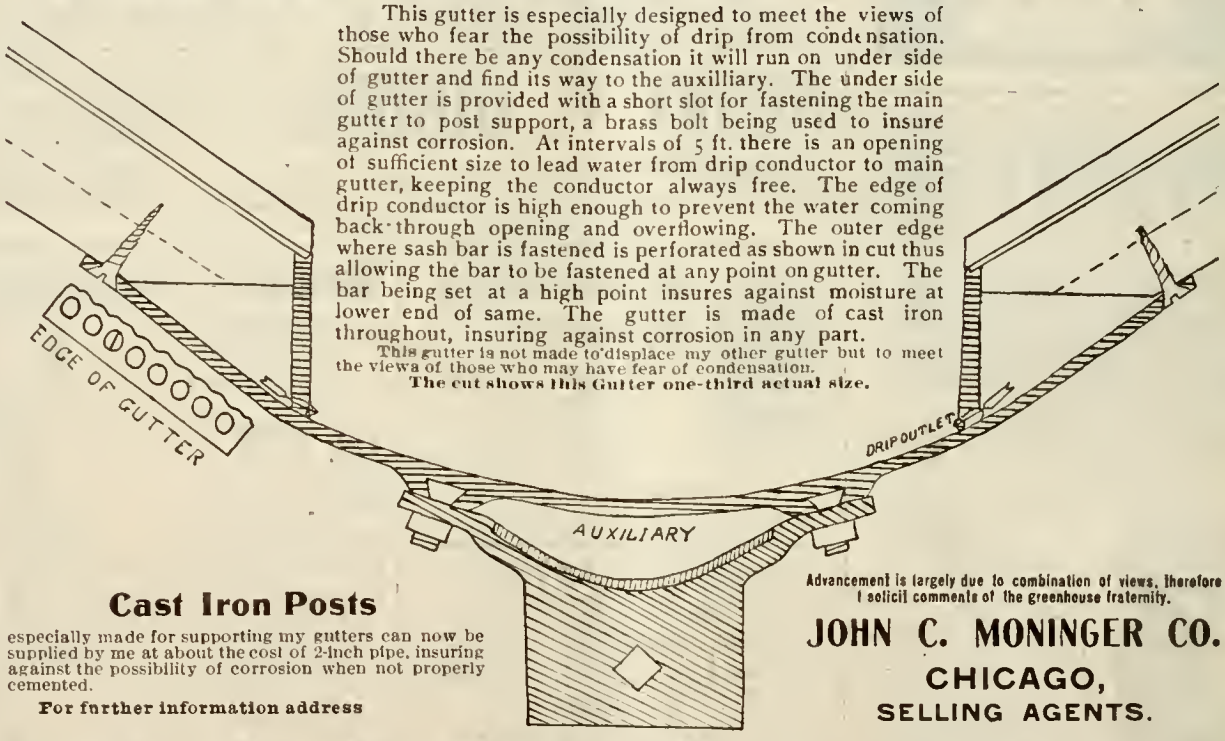
Garland Gutter No. 3.



This gutter is especially designed to meet the views of those who fear the possibility of drip from condensation. Should there be any condensation it will run on under side of gutter and find its way to the auxilliary. The under side of gutter is provided with a short slot for fastening the main gutter to post support, a brass bolt being used to insure against corrosion. At intervals of 5 ft. there is an opening of sufficient size to lead water from drip conductor to main gutter, keeping the conductor always free. The edge of drip conductor is high enough to prevent the water coming back through opening and overflowing. The outer edge where sash bar is fastened is perforated as shown in cut thus allowing the bar to be fastened at any point on gutter. The bar being set at a high point insures against moisture at lower end of same. The gutter is made of cast iron throughout, insuring against corrosion in any part.

This gutter is not made to displace my other gutter but to meet the views of those who may have fear of condensation.

The cut shows this Gutter one-third actual size.

Cast Iron Posts

especially made for supporting my gutters can now be supplied by me at about the cost of 2-inch pipe, insuring against the possibility of corrosion when not properly cemented.

For further information address

Advancement is largely due to combination of views, therefore I solicit comments of the greenhouse fraternity.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Pencil Points.

Prince Henry's visits to the different cities have caused many florists to be somewhat grateful. We are sorry to say that we were prohibited from taking photographs of some of the principal work on account of the necessity of using flashlights and the stringent rules against such. The insurance companies are opposed to it and the magnesia causes so much extra work that it renders photographing floral decorations nigh an impossibility. We have, however, made arrangements to show you a series of the principal decorations done in the past few decades.

We expect to see some retailers adopt the European custom of putting on their stationery and wagons "By special appointment purveyors to H. R. H. Prince Henry of Prussia." They do funnier things.

German beer mugs filled with blue corn flowers or carnations, handle tied with German colors, are liable to be the most popular thing to put on your counter just now. Some of these mugs are splendid works of art, and florists who carry a stock of fancy vases might do well to invest in a few; they are a most acceptable present to more than those of Teutonic blood.

Glad to see that the Chicago retailers have organized to protect their interests. There was something of the sort done in New York, years ago but it accomplished nothing but to prove that there was no lasting unity. There might be cause for differences of opinions but we are in favor of all sections of the trade organizing. People unite for better or worse—aim to make it the former. The Chicago retailers must have exceptional influence and determination. Note the city authorities' action in driving fakirs and stands off the streets. These things have assumed gigantic proportions in New York where it would seem to require an earthquake to change matters.

We note "S. F. C.'s" inquiry about retailers' advertising. Your reply was right. It just depends where your trade is and what class it is. A few florists have a short adv. immediately after the obituary list in some papers; they seek for funeral trade. New York florists have been compelled to abstain from advertising on account of the thousand and one claimants for a share of their patronage. The neat booklet on cut flowers or plants, mailed to the best buyers, is the most generally adopted form. Might be able to do something by a catchy adv. in the principal paper of your section, but a good location, fine work and fair dealing are the main roads to success. Unless you offer some exceptional inducement the American people won't travel very far to patronize you.

Remember Patrick's Day is next Monday, and it might be well for you to make a display of Shamrocks in your window. Any florist ought to be ashamed to fake the public by offering all sorts of cattle feed as Shamrocks. The right stuff is obtainable and a big trade will be done by those who cater to it. The tiny inch or even two-inch pots of this plant, trimmed with Emerald ribbon, will sell well if displayed to advantage.

Who's going to invent a special cap for lilies? Needn't be a Parisian creation, just a soft cotton-batting cap with a rubber band rim and an indented top to go between the petals. Thousands of lilies are bruised and rendered unfit for sale for the reason that they are badly packed. You all have records of lamentable stories anent Easter deliveries. Strange we are so far behind the times as not to provide the trade with something practical at an infinitesimal cost, easy to put on and of immense benefit to grower and retailer and the public. Yes, let's manufacture caps now for our lilies.

"Cape Smilax" is the latest addition to the long list of names given to "Wild" smilax. "Wild" is a poor name to give it anyhow. There is a good deal in a name sometimes. It lessens the value of any material to call it wild, and the trade should drop the word as applied to decorative material.

We are going to have painted pots and saucers again for Easter plants. It is impossible to grow plants for any length of time in ordinary pots and then have them fit to mingle with refined furnishings. One needs be either blind of eye or blunt of taste who fails to recognize the crime of placing an ordinary plant pot in close proximity to some grand work of art; besides there are other reasons why we should show the public that we are educators in color effects. Get some pots, dip them in a thin solution of enamel paint, foliage green, red, white or yellow colors, with saucers to match. You need not take some of your plants out of pots they were grown in; put them in a size larger and top off with green sheet moss. Lilies can be put in white, green or yellow pots. Genistas in same. Azaleas in white or green. Red will show off some of your green plants.

The good trade will have none of your crepe paper; the thing was overdone and is now detested. Some will ask for it in the best stores, but only when they see it. Porto Rican matting will be popular, but it must be used moderately, unraveled and made very light and graceful; it requires considerable more ability to trim with this material than it does with crepe paper, but it's easy to supple fingers and a color sensitive eye.

You might prepare a lot of Porto Rican pot covers now. Cut the sheets into different widths, just wide enough to suit the several size pots. When half of it is unmatted for a fringe you can tie them in the center with a bow of gauze ribbon and taseled cord. They are easily adjusted to pot and plant and it saves you time when time is most wanted.

There will be a good demand for well flowered plants of Lady Campbell violets as usual this Easter, but don't you know the over anxiety and unnecessary haste in shipping these plants to the stores long before Easter Saturday does great harm to the future of this section? A basket of ill smelling violets is not only an insult but a danger to health; they should and can be sent to customers in an acceptable condition. It is impossible for you to sell stale cut violets; don't defraud by selling them stale on plants. Get a few sample plants in on time to sell by but demand sweet ones from your grower for Saturday and Sunday delivery.

Small plants of Asparagus tenuissimus are being used to much satisfaction in fern dishes.

Just a word or two about decorations where roses are used. When roses, no matter how fine, are arranged in a manner that the reverse of their foliage shows prominently the effect is marred or ruined altogether. The roses look old or faded. In order to create the best impression arrange your roses to face up or outwards as if growing; they last much longer and at all times look more natural, consequently better. Never forget that a good cluster of roses is more artistic than any so-called screen or scattered arrangement and that the foliage needs as much care as the blooms themselves.

There are very few forms of decoration where the flowers cannot be arranged in vases of water; that is the oldest and most popular way. Nearly all the principal table decorations recently consisted of bowls or vases of flowers instead of the stiff flat baskets. There are two main reasons for this. The wealthy people who have won cups at horse shows, etc., like to display them and then the flowers last so much longer in water, you know. It requires more ability to fix up a bowl than a basket and anything requiring extended ability elevates the art.

Don't forget a well composed and cleanly gotten up estimate may land you many a good job after Easter. Learn how to truthfully describe your work and ideas. There will be plenty of Easter weddings, and plenty of flowering plants to use at them. You will find it very difficult to create anything finer than a hedge row effect of pink, red or white azaleas. They must be all one color, need not be of one height, but the foreground is most important. A plastered balustrade or a trellis of roses can easily be made; what you must aim to create is a summer hedge in bloom. You can call it a Venetian or Italian rose garden effect, or whatever you like. We always suggest this kind of arrangement where there is a marble staircase, and they are in every modern home of the rich.

All the trade reports teem with necessary complaints about wholesale houses being glutted. Nevertheless the fact remains that higher prices have been paid for stock this year than for several years. There were never better prices than were obtained for many things and on the whole it was a very good season so far. The man who had good stock sold it at very remunerative prices. The market is heaped with all manner of ill-grown stock, which can only be used in cheap made-up work.

You will soon need lots of pansies and bulbous flowers for boxes and vases and beds, and please don't have your messenger boy or driver plant them. Hire a gardener. Find a good plantsman to care for your Easter plants, get one or two from your gower if possible for Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

We'll give you our Easter ideas in color combination and plants next issue.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Cannas.

I received one or two letters asking me to state more plainly or completely what I meant by placing the canna roots on a bench on an inch or so of sphagnum moss. I did not add that some moss should be scattered over the bulbs as well, but I took it for granted that any or every one would know that it would be necessary to cover the roots as well; that is, just cover enough to barely hide them. Keep moderately moist and they will soon start.

Caladium Esculentum.

The caladium esculentum roots are just arriving. This is a very unimportant plant with many, but where much bedding is done there is large use for it and where you grow a thousand of these leafy plants any economy of space in their cultivation is of great value. Now or within two weeks is plenty of time to start them. Place the bulbs in flats three inches deep, an inch of rotten manure or leaf mould in the bottom, and then the bulbs, and then fill up between the bulbs with sand. You can place the bulbs almost touching and the flats can be placed a few inches above some heating pipes. The root action will start at once, but you will save three weeks' bench room and when potted into 5-inch pots directly after Easter, they will go right ahead.

Bulbs from 2½ to 3 inches in diameter are large enough to make the finest decorative plants, and those as large as cocoanuts should be kept south for an edible vegetable for which they are used by people who cannot afford to indulge in the great luxury of Solanum tuberosum. Some people will grow this plant in a warm, shady house and produce a long, soft growth which only blows into shreds when planted out. The lightest house with plenty of ventilation is what it wants.

Ficus Elastica.

This is a good time to moss your Ficus elastica, supposing you have plants that will bear it. Leave three or four leaves and joints above the cut, put a little sphagnum in the incision made, which may be an inch or 1½ inches long, and tie enough moss round the cut to make a bunch as big (or nearly) as a hen's egg. Syringe every day as you will likely be doing to the plants at this time of the year and in six or seven weeks they will have sent out roots enough so that you can sever the young plant from the parent. These freshly potted, newly severed plants will not stand the full sun and a draught right off, and if so exposed will often wilt badly or die. Keep them close, moist and warm for a few weeks to give them a chance to get hold of their surroundings.

Crotons.

Crotons root from the cuttings in good strong heat in the usual way of rooting cuttings, but quite as sure a way, and, to produce a strong plant quickly, they are better propagated like the rubbers. The ficus will exist and even thrive in a comparatively low temperature, say 50 degrees at night, but the crotons should never be below 60, and better 65 to 70 degrees, at any stage of their growth.

Seeds.

It is now time to sow a good part of your main crop of aster seed; also about the 20th of the month sow zinnia, ten week stocks, balsam, Phlox Drummondii, in fact, all the so-called hardy annuals. Don't forget to sow some ricinus end of the month. You are sure to be asked for then if you don't have them. Celosia can also be sown now, and dianthus of the chinensis and Heddewigii type.

This is about the time to sow Cobæa scandens. For a cheap summer climber to make a big growth and cover a big space in a few months, there is nothing equal to the Cobæa. Time was when you were very likely to get cobæa that would not grow, however skillfully sown, but of late years we get such good seed from California that most any old seedsman will send you good seeds. It should be sown on end, but it is so difficult to describe which end, that I would rather say just squeeze it into the surface of soil on edge and if kept in a house at about 55 degrees and kept moderately moist you will get all of them up.

Begonias.

Begonias of the tuberous type for bedding purposes should be started now. There is no need of putting them in pots, they are better started in flats in a mixture of leaf mould and sand and placed in a house at 55 to 60 degrees. By the middle of April they will be ready to pot into 4-inch pots, and I have never found a place that suited them so well from that time till bedding time, as a mild hotbed. They will stand the fullest sun if the roots are moist and you can remove the sash the last two weeks in May and then they do not feel the change to the open air and broad sun.

Hotbeds.

You are almost lucky if you do not have to resort to the primitive greenhouse known as a hotbed, but many of us do for two reasons: It gives us room for quite a little overflow and unmistakably it grows many things better than any greenhouse, which I can mention later, for we don't believe in using hotbeds for any of our plants before the second week of April, but it is time to look out for material. If you were a market gardner and raising lettuce and the tropical "cowcumber," you would want a bed three feet deep with mats to cover at night, etc., but after the middle of April no very hot bed is needed. But the gentle bottom heat, the uniform moisture of the roots and the ammonia, which doubtless feeds the leaves of plants, will make many of our common bedding plants jump as no greenhouse can, particularly one where the shade is on and coal is economized.

Straw stable litter is the best of material and if it is fresh a third of leaves well mixed with it will do no harm. Refuse hops from the breweries is a most violent fermenter, and if a third of that can be procured fresh and mixed with the stable litter it makes the very best and heat-lasting material. No material should be hauled on your place and dumped into a bed; if so, it will be uneven in heat, likely to sink in one spot more than another, and be frightfully hot for the first two weeks and burn itself up quickly. The material should have at least two turnings, mixing the long with the short, at intervals of four or five days. When making the bed see that every part is equally solid by a thorough treading at every layer of six inches of material, and if it is at all dry, have the hose handy and at every 6-inch layer give it a good sprinkling. You will then have a bed that will heat slowly and mildly but will be even and lasting.

Speaking about refuse hops, when well rotted it is a splendid substitute for genuine leaf-mould and when about half rotten has considerable more fertilizing quality about it. The best fuchsias I ever saw grown had about one-fourth of hops and nothing else but loam. But remember if you live in a delicate nosed community you should get their permission to have this material on your premises, for when fermenting Limburger cheese in its most aggravated mood is attar of roses compared to it. Limburger must be within two feet to remind you vividly of the Fatherland, but fermenting hops is audible two miles away.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

Those who are intending to plant for early summer cutting should now have their plants in 3-inch pots. These will be in fine condition for planting week after Easter.

By planting at this time young stock gets the full advantage of the best growing season of the year and will make plants fit to bear a good crop by the beginning of June, when the other houses are cleared out for general planting. The benches should be thoroughly repaired and washed clean by playing the hose on them with sufficient force to dislodge the old soil from all joints and crevices, and given a coat of hot lime-wash to help preserve the wood and destroy insect eggs.

The soil should be got into a hearty condition before planting is done. If too wet when brought in it should be allowed to lie on the benches a couple of days; by turning it over once a day it will soon get into good condition. As a fertilizer, a sprinkling of bone meal should be used; twenty pounds to a bench 100x4½ feet is about the right quantity at this time. Bone meal should not be used for this purpose until it has been in stock for some time, as this allows time for deleterious gases to escape. The advantage to young stock is a quicker start and a better quality of growth.

Bridesmaids, Brides and other roses of about the same habits of growth require about a square foot of space, Beauties 1½ feet. By planting diagonally across the bench each plant will receive an equal amount of light. This style of planting also makes it easier to reach them with the syringe.

Planting should be done with the same regard to the health of the plant as potting. I have often seen young stock potted and repotted with the greatest of care, but when planting time came they were hustled into the bench with as little ceremony as if they were so many coleus. The ball should be disturbed as little as possible and placed just deep enough in the soil to cover it. The soil should be carefully and equally firmed all around it. Water around the ball. The water should not be dashed on the soil, but allowed to run slowly. This individual watering should be continued for the first ten days, during which time the soil should be disturbed as little as possible.

Syringing should be done twice every bright day, but never so late in the afternoon that the foliage will not have ample time to dry before night.

Repotting should be done just as soon as the plants require it and ought not to be allowed to stand over till something else is done. Roses when potbound for any length of time are very hard to start after being repotted.

RIBES.

HOUSE OF VIOLETS.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph taken Jan. 29th of a house of Princess of Wales violets at the establishment of Mr. William Sim, Cliftondale, Mass.

The house is 15x300 and contains 3,000 plants, each plant occupying a square foot of space. The house was planted the first week in November, succeeding a crop of chrysanthemums. Up to March 1st the pick of first-class blooms was 240,000, and there is promise of a splendid crop up to Easter. The house runs northeast and southwest.

In response to an inquiry regarding his method of growing the Princess of Wales, Mr. Sim writes: "When the flowering season is over—say after Easter—before taking the plants from the houses I pull away all runners and destroy them. This leaves the plant a great deal smaller, only the center crown being left. I then lift the plants and heel them into a cold frame and keep them exposed to all weather except frost.

"If the season is so the ground can be worked, we commence and break the old plants up into single crowns, all having good roots, and plant them in the field 12x12 inches apart. I do not allow any runners to come on the plants in the summer. I do not begin to house my plants until I get a crop of chrysanthemums cut. I grow them in the same soil as the mums in solid beds.

"After planting we run the houses at 45 degrees at night, 60 degrees days, increasing the temperature to 50 degrees towards Christmas. In January we let the temperature drop to 40 degrees nights, and in February and March to 36 degrees, with all possible ventilation.

"I prefer an even span greenhouse, with large glass, and glass to the ground on both sides, running northeast and southwest, thus getting the early sun in midwinter."

CARNATION NOTES.

This has been a very steady cold winter and most of us have had to fire steady during the first ten weeks of the year, but we have also had more bright days this winter than for several winters past. This is as it should be and our carnations have done better all winter and are in better shape now than usual at this time. There is not that soft, transparent look to the grass which invariably follows a long dark spell such as we usually have had in late winters.

We are having warmer weather now and in the next six weeks it will take a good deal of judgment to keep the plants in good condition so they will keep up in quality until well into the summer. We are likely to have sudden cold snaps ocasionally during this month and early April and you must be continually on your guard.

But while it is mild you must be careful about the ventilators so it does not get too warm in the houses and exhaust your plants. Carnations like a great quantity of fresh air as long as there are no cold draughts striking the plants. We have already had a few nights when it was necessary to open the ventilators about an inch and at the same time keep steam around in one pipe to keep the atmosphere dry and moving. These damp, rainy nights are very harmful to carnations and the only resource we have is the steam pipe. It may cause the temperature to run up a few degrees above the night temperature but that will do no harm if there is an inch or two of ventilation, in fact it is better than if the temperature stood below 55 degrees, as it would likely be too damp in the house. This may seem like wasting fuel to some, but you will find it will pay you well later on.

The sun is getting stronger now again and when the days are bright the plants will need increased supplies of water. The soil is full of roots now and except in case of a long cloudy spell it is almost impossible to overwater. See that none of the beds get extremely dry as it will rapidly reduce the quality of the blooms.

If the soil is pretty well exhausted you would do well to give them a good mulching of well rotted cow manure, but be sure it is well rotted if you use it alone. If it is a little fresh you can mix it with soil in about equal proportions and it will do no harm. If applied at once it will greatly benefit your Easter crop too. If you are not prepared to do that now, you should give them a sprinkling of wood ashes or lime to help them bear up under the forcing you are sure to do during the next two weeks. With the increased amount of sunshine we have now there is not so much danger of injuring the plants by a spell of forcing as there is at Xmas, but it must not be overdone else it will make the plants unfit to produce quality later on.

The hot weather of early summer is extremely hard on the carnation and we must strive to have them in as good condition as possible to meet it. So it will pay to keep the temperature as near normal as long as we can. There is an increased demand each summer for carnations and we think it pays us well to have good blooms at least until the middle of July. Of course we do not get for them then what we do now, but they do not cost us as much to grow them either.

About this time of the year we are sure to be troubled some with red spider unless we watch closely and syringe at every opportunity. Do it well whenever you do it, and if possible from both sides of the bench. It should be done before noon, so the plants can dry off before night and no bad results such as stem-rot, rust, etc., will follow.

Another pest that bothers us more now than at any other time is the thrips. I do not know if it is so everywhere, but it is a fact that we have to combat this parasite more just at this time than at any other time of the year. Persistent fumigating with fresh tobacco stems will usually destroy them and if they are extra hard to get rid of we sprinkle a little Cayenne pepper on the stems before lighting and this always gives them the finishing touch.

Look right after your young stock now so it does not suffer for want of attention. Some of the first propagation will likely need a shift and it should be done as soon as it is needed. Don't put it off until after Easter, when you will have a little more room. A few weeks are enough to cause them to get stunted and it will take a long time for them to get over it, if ever. Pinching or topping should also be looked after right along. Remember that these young plants are what you are depending on for your next season's crop and the best treatment you are capable of giving them is not too good for them.

DISEASED CARNATIONS.

I send a sample of Marquis carnation cutting. You will see some disease on the leaves. It comes in the form of spots and seems to be attacking a number of plants. It is not only on Marquis and Daybreak, but also on Crocker some, which is the strongest growing carnation we have ever grown. We have kept some sulphur on heating pipes and have dusted a little very recently on the foliage. The plants are in the north bench of cutting-house with temperature 48 to 50 at night. They are planted in soil where some small mums were growing in fall.

Will you kindly let us know what the trouble is, and a remedy if possible.

A. C. G.

The above inquiry came to me accompanied by a young carnation plant which was badly affected with Septoria dianthi, or as it is commonly called, "spot." This is plainly a fungous disease, and like all that class of diseases is brought on by stagnation. In a light, well ventilated house, and if the watering is done carefully, it ought never appear.

To rid themselves of it I would advise them to pick off every leaf that has a spot on it and burn them. Keep a little sulphur on the pipes, give plenty of ventilation and keep the plants a little on the dry side. The lime and sulphur dusted on the foliage ought to help some, but I think a spraying once a week with the copper solution would be more effective.

There is no need of throwing the plants away unless the plants are diseased enough to weaken them. It is not a constitutional disease and after they are once rid of it, it is not likely to reappear except through careless culture.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Annual Meeting of the Executive Committee.

The executive committee met at Asheville, N. C., on Tuesday and Wednesday, March 4th and 5th. All the members of the committee were present with the exception of ex-President O'Mara and Messrs. E. Buettner and R. Witterstaetter.

Many communications of importance were read by the secretary, several of these being from nursery and florist firms in southern territory, expressing approval of the plan to hold a convention in the south, and promising co-operation.

The secretary's report indicated a prosperous condition in all departments of the society's work. The treasurer's report showed a larger balance on hand than has ever been before in the society's history, the amount on hand January 1st, in the general fund, being $2,111.11, and in the permanent fund, $1,574.68. The vouchers were examined, approved and found correct by a sub-committee of the board.

The new auditorium which is to be the headquarters of the convention was visited and found to be admirably adapted for the purpose, and it has been secured for the society's use for the week of August 17-23.

Owing to the fact that there is no florists' organization in that section to whom the work could be delegated, the business of arranging for the trade exhibition was placed in the hands of the secretary, with instructions that the charge for exhibition space shall be reduced this year 20 per cent. below the schedule of last year. It is expected that there will be a large and varied display, especially of the products of southern horticultural industry.

The subject of southern productions for northern consumption in commercial horticultural lines will furnish the theme for much of the discussion before the society during the convention meetings.

It was decided that a president's reception should take place, in the same manner as heretofore, and arrangements will be made for an illustrated lecture on one evening.

An inspection of the facilities for the sporting members of the society was made, and it was found that there are at present two sets of bowling alleys and two more are to be built this spring, so that there need be no solicitude regarding accommodations in this line. It is also expected that the members fond of trap shooting will be given an opportunity to test their skill in competition with some of the local celebrities. Messrs. Robert Halliday and A. B. Cartledge, with one other member to be chosen later, have been appointed by President Burton a committee to take charge of the sporting events.

In accordance with the vote passed at the convention in Buffalo last year, the secretary was instructed to send a circular letter to bulb growers throughout the country, asking that they make a display of their products at this convention, and making the stipulation that all such growers shall have free exhibition space for the display of one dozen each of such varieties as they may desire to show, the bulbs thus contributed to be the property of the society, to be used for testing purposes as to their forcing qualities during the following season, and a report thereon to be made next year.

A sub-committee having been appointed to consider the matter of the distribution of S. A. F. medals through other societies, made the following report, which, after full consideration, was adopted:

Your committee on the distribution of medals by the S. A. F. through floricultural organizations, appointed to make recommendations regarding the donation of such medals and the manner of awarding same, beg to submit the following for the consideration of the executive committee:

First. Your committee having in mind the widespread interest and keen competition in several states, created by the offering of medals by the S. A. F. and the consequent benefit to horticulture thereby engendered, would recommend the continuance of their distribution.

Second. Your committee would recommend that one silver and one bronze medal be offered by this society, to be awarded for new and meritorious plants or flowers of American origin exhibited at a regular public exhibition; said medals not to be awarded unless the plants and flowers exhibited are entirely worthy of such award, through the following organizations:

Chrysanthemum Society of America,
American Carnation Society,
American Rose Society,
Massachusetts Horticultural Society,
Pennsylvania Horticultural Society,
Chicago Horticultural Society,
Newport (R. I.) Horticultural Society,
Society of Indiana Florists,
New Jersey Floricultural Society,
New Orleans Horticultural Society,
New Haven Horticultural Society,
New York Florists' Club,
Cincinnati Florists' Society,
Baltimore Gardeners' & Florists' Club, and such other organizations as the executive committee in their judgment may designate.

Further, that the medals already offered to such of the foregoing societies by the S. A. F. for the purposes named above, and which on account of local circumstances have not yet been awarded, shall not form part of the distribution contemplated herein, and shall be at the disposal of such societies until awarded; provided, however, that two medals of equal value shall not be awarded through any one society in one year.

Third. An exhibit or exhibits competing for these medals may be shown at any regular public exhibition held by any one of the foregoing specified floricultural organizations, but no plant or flower having won the society's medal three times shall be eligible to compete again for a similar medal.

Fourth. The official report of the details of said awards with the name and description of the plants or flowers to which said medals shall have been awarded, shall be furnished to the secretary of the S. A. F. for the purposes of record.

The question of the identity of the rose known as Helen Gould came up for discussion, and, after a full expression of views by the members, a vote was passed as follows:

Whereas the matter of the synonymy of the imported rose Baldwin, which rose has been known and sold variously as Baldwin, Columbia, Red Kaiserin and Helen Gould, having come to the attention of the executive committee of the S. A. F. through the secretary, in his laudable endeavor to have his published record of new introductions correct, the correspondence as had by him with several interested parties having been presented to that committee, and

Whereas the communications published in the trade papers upon this subject convince the executive committee that the matter of synonymy of said rose Baldwin has been definitely settled by a committee of the Philadelphia Florists' Club, appointed to investigate same, Be it

Resolved, That the executive committee, while deprecating the action which made necessary the work of the said committee of the Philadelphia Florists' Club, compliment that committee on their exhaustive labors which have resulted in establishing said synonymy, and while appreciating the estimable service rendered by said committee of the Philadelphia Florists' Club to the trade and the public at large, the executive committee consider that no further action in the premises is necessary on their part.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Philadelphia Florists' Club and also published in the technical press of the country.

The committee would recommend the re-establishment of the Nomenclature Committee of the S. A. F., to whom all matters of similar import in future be referred.

It was decided that when the selection of the next convention place shall come before the society, the polls shall remain open for at least one hour, for the convenience of those desiring to express their preference.

A communication regarding the proposed United States laws in reference to the inspection and fumigation of nursery stock was referred to the legislative committee of the society.

In compliance with an invitation from the secretary of the Horticultural Society of New York, ex-President O'Mara was appointed a delegate to represent the S. A. F. at the Plant Breeding Conference, which is to be held in New York City this year.

The president reappointed the present legislative committee, also the present incumbents of the offices of botanist, entomologist, and pathologist.

It was announced by Vice-President Deake that it was the purpose of the local people to entertain the visitors next August with a drive through Biltmore and a ride to Overlook Park. At the latter place, which is 3,000 feet above the sea level, an old-fashioned watermelon eating will be on the program.

Season tickets for each member of the convention, admitting to the rose exhibition in New York City, were received from Secretary Barron, and a vote of thanks accorded therefor.

A snb-committee appointed for that purpose presented the following final resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

We, the members of the executive committee of the S. A. F., in meeting assembled, desire to express our thanks to the Asheville Board of Trade, to the Idlewild Floral Co., to the Elks Lodge of Asheville, the Biltmore Estate, Messrs. Branch & Young, proprietors of Swannanoa Hotel, for the unbounded hospitality and many courtesies shown us during our stay in this city, also to the daily press of Asheville for the liberal notice given of our proceedings.

WILLIAM J. STEWART, Secretary.

HYBRID STOCK FOR ROSE PROPAGATION.

By Dr. W. Van Fleet.

[Paper read before the American Rose Society, March 12 19 2.]

But little effort has been made to ascertain the rose stocks best suited for American use. Rose growers here mainly propagate cuttings, and "own root" roses of all varieties that may be increased in that manner have, until very lately, been much preferred for culture both under glass and in the open. Recent successful commercial trials, however, have shown the advantage of grafting certain forcing roses on stocks resistant to the "eel worm," as well as to supply a root system of greater vigor than is inherent in the variety wanted. Then, too, a considerable number of the most desirable hardy roses propagate very sparingly, if at all, by cuttings. The increase by root cuttings and clump division is slow and precarious, so that budding and grafting on congenial stocks remain the only practicable methods.

We have hitherto accepted the stocks most approved by European growers as without question the most available, and for greenhouse commercial work the Manetti rose, of hybrid China parentage, may always be most useful; but for outside planting both Manetti and Dog Brier have proven dismal failures under our climatic conditions. The latter does not thrive at all, and the former, while vigorous enough, suckers badly and ceases growing too early after dry summers to encourage late blooms in those varieties disposed to autumnal flowering.

Manetti roots are very fibrous, forming a perfect mat in rich, moist soil; but they run shallow and are quickly affected by drought. They drink greedily soluble nourishment, but seem unable to extract much plant food from dry soil. The common experience with roses worked on Manetti is that they are troublesome and short-lived, unless so planted as eventually to throw out an adequate root system of their own. The great majority of the imported budded roses are discarded after blooming a season or two, and the remaining plants seldom develop into the strong, vigorous specimens we have a right to expect.

These defects in European stocks have been long known, though but little effort has been made to find more useful substitutes. One nursery in the west claimed some years ago to use Mme. Plantier, a vigorous and very hardy rose of much-mixed parentage, but of the hybrid China type, with great success; but we have not heard much about it since. Our native Prairie rose, Rosa setigera, has been used in an experimental way by the writer and others with much success, both as a stock for budding and root grafting. It is exceedingly hardy, the foliage is resistant to most diseases, and the root system is strong and penetrates the soil deeply. Buds or grafts unite readily, and the union seems very permanent, but time has not tested the latter claim. All varieties tried grow well on this stock, which may be easily increased by seeds or cuttings. It is of a climbing habit, and the canes are not suitable for high budding for tree or standard effects. The roots seldom sucker, all the new growth starting from the crown.

For high budding we have found nothing better than the Penzance hybrid sweetbriers, rose Bradwardine, Amy Robsart and Anne of Gierstein. They grow here more upright and vigorous than the type species, and are not subject to sunscald like standard Manetti. Other hybrids of the sweetbrier, with General Jacqueminot, and with various hybrid perpetuals, of our own raising, have the same characteristics. There is no suckering, and they are easily increased by cuttings. Lord Penzance and other sweetbrier hybrids, containing blood of the Persian yellow class, should be avoided for this purpose. The canes are more slender, and propagation is less certain.

The most suitable stocks for low or dwarf budding and root grafting appear to be hybrids of Rosa multiflora and R. Luciæ, more widely known as R. Wichuraiana. Seedlings of Clothilde Soupert crossed with Crimson Rambler furnish the best example of the former class. Some are thornless, or nearly so, strong, rapid growers and deep rooters. They work very easily, and the buds or grafts soon make a firm union. They can be increased by cuttings of green and hard wood with the greatest facility.

Crosses between Crimson Rambler and R. Wichuraiana, to use the name best known, are still more vigorous, but less upright in habit and quite thorny. They strike readily from cuttings, and also root as freely from the tips as a dewberry, when allowed to trail. The roots penetrate the soil deeply, and the bark works with the greatest ease when ready for budding.

Crosses between R. Wichuraiana and China roses sometimes possess great vigor. One plant two years from the seed, planted in poor, gravelly upland, threw a trailing cane 26 feet long last summer. They all seem very easy of propagation and are more upright and less thorny than R. Wichuraiana itself, which trails as flat as a melon vine.

The roots of R. Wichuraiana and its hybrids go deep down in the soil, and if there is any moisture or fertility they will find it. They will thrive on the most barren slope when established and the plants look as if they would endure for all time. The long, smooth roots are admirable for grafting, and they can be worked as easily and certainly as apple roots if good wood is fitted to them. The grafts may be tied with twine or lightly waxed and packed in damp moss, and kept rather warm until union is effected.

Neither Rosa multiflora nor R. Wichuraiana hybrids sucker, but buds start freely from the crown, which should be set rather deeply in budded plants. There is no trouble with suckering from the root grafts. Plants of the above hybrids grown from cuttings of good sized wood are very manageable, and would seem to be preferable to Manetti for most purposes.

R. multiflora seedlings are being used to some extent by commercial rose growers, and they seem to be growing in favor; but we think hybrids of the Rambler series would be more satisfactory. Helene, a very vigorous and almost thornless seedling of Crimson Rambler, is now in commerce, and looks as if it would answer the purpose admirably, though we have not tried it.

While rather off the subject the writer would mention that Perle des Jardins, budded on an established plant of Cherokee rose, Rosa lævigata, is giving splendid blooms of almost exhibition quality, in a cold, damp house where five years' effort with potted Perles on own roots and Manetti only resulted in a chance "bullhead" once or twice a year. Further trials will be made with teas and hybrid teas on this stock.

There is a growing conviction among propagators that the stock is as important as the scion, and grand commercial results have come from the proper selection of resistant and congenial stocks in the culture of grapes, plums and other fruits. The breeding of stocks by hybridization and selection may become as essential as the production of new varieties, if American rose culture is ever to reach its proper development in the horticultural world. The conclusions above detailed are based on very limited experimentation and are offered only to stimulate further research in that direction.

NEW ROSES.

By E. G. Hill.

[Paper presented to the American Rose Society March 12, 1902.]

The subject assigned to me is an interesting as well as a problematic one with which to deal from the standpoint of the American Rose grower. Unconsciously, perhaps, every new candidate is measured and gauged by one of three sorts, American Beauty, Bride, or Bridesmaid. Of each newcomer it is asked, "Is it as good as Bride, 'Maid or Beauty?"

While we shall, in the future, undoubtedly have as fine sorts in varying colors, it is not my good fortune to chronicle the advent of any such in this paper, though attempts at producing them are proceeding in many places and we hope that the coveted yellow or red 'Maid may soon make its appearance.

It is announced that there are to be added to our lists this coming year a yellow and a pink Kaiserin; we shall be glad to welcome them and hope that they may be distinct enough to hold their places. One or two recent sorts, similarly described, have lacked the necessary qualities to give them permanence.

Bessie Brown has many points that go to make up a valuable rose. While it is probably the grandest variety of Carnot color, it sometimes comes with crimped outer petals, which somewhat detracts from its beauty.

Mrs. Mawley is certainly a fine tea rose of enormous size, and produces a very large quantity of buds, but with us it often comes soft in texture and brings too many short stems.

The English gold medal rose, Mildred Grant, is most beautiful, and, whilst perhaps it has too great an infusion of the H. P. blood in its veins to force in winter, it should prove a fine rose for pot and garden culture.

Lady Battersea is a lovely cherry crimson colored tea from Mr. Geo. Paul. This we hoped would prove a valuable forcing variety, but regret to say that it refuses to move into growth during three of the principal winter months. We had hoped for better things from it.

Mrs. Oliver Ames should prove of value wherever Mme. Cusin prospers. It is a very fine shipping variety and wonderfully productive as seen growing at Mr. May's place. It is a charming color and its delicate shading lends beauty to a cluster of the variety.

All those who succeed with Golden Gate will want Ivory. It is an ideal forcing rose and will doubtless secure a place for itself alongside of the Bride, which is saying a great deal. It is very prolific and of good constitution, and the quantity of flowers produced will commend it. Its sparsity of foliage is held against it by some, but the same objection holds against Golden Gate.

Duchess of Portland, Lady Beauclere, Mamie, Boadicea, Mrs. R. B. Cant.—These charming British roses we have seen bearing their beautiful flowers, but whether they will force in winter is questionable. However, they are each and every one charmingly beautiful and will doubtless supplant many of the hybrid perpetuals which are now grown in our gardens. No more finely shaped flowers than the above varieties produce can be found in any class of rose, and among their chief merits are large size and continuity of bloom.

Out of eighty varieties imported during the last eighteen months the following commend themselves as being worthy of growing: Prince de Bulgarie, a fine salmon-tinted hybrid; Andre Raffy, in the way of Prince Camille de Rohan, but freer in bloom; Mme. J. Favre (H. T.); Duc de Mortemart (H. T.); Miss Agnes C. Sherman (Tea); Pharisaer (H. T.); Mina Barbanson; La Tosca (H. T.); Mlle. Viger (H. T.); Marquis de Querhoent (Tea), a promising sort; Mme. E. Perrin (H. T.); Franco-Russe, a fine apricot yellow (Tea).

I think the above named will surely prove interesting and worthy additions to the garden, or for growing in pots. We hope another year to chronicle the advent of some new American seedling roses, but they had best be exhibited ere much is said concerning them.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market continues quiet; comments of a week ago will apply to this week. Choice Beauties bring $6 per doz.; choice teas, $10 to $12 per 100; choice carnations, $3 per 100. The quantity of blooms of these grades is not large. Violets are on every street corner in the shopping district. Some of the bulbous stock ought to be there, too, but the fakirs are a discriminating set now. Long stemmed sweet peas with well colored blooms sell well at 50 cents to $1 per 100, but the short stemmed, with faded flowers, go to the street.

Prince Henry.

The event of the week was the meteor-like visit of Prince Henry on Monday. He contrived to crowd a reception at City Hall, a visit to Independence Hall, an inspection of the czar's two warships at Cramp's shipyard, and a dinner at the Union League in less than five hours' time spent here. The decorations at the City Hall were in the mayor's reception room and in the conversation room. Herman Scohenfeld did the work, using greens and streamers of German and American colors effectively on the great chandelier in the reception room and banking the other rooms with foliage plants.

The dinner at the League, where one hundred guests sat down, gave Hugh Graham a chance to show his skill. The table was I-shaped with a great hollow oval in the center. This oval was filled with flowering plants, rhododendrons, azaleas and cinerarias on the edge. The Imperial yacht "Meteor" floated on a water-like mirror. Choice American Beauty roses and carnation "Prince Henry," one of Mr. Graham's seedlings (which is a little deeper in color than Mrs. Van Rensselaer, his standard pink seedling of Daybreak shade) were freely used on the table. Banks of foliage and flowering plants about the banquet hall completed the handsome decorations.

Easter.

The dark weather of February and early part of March has had a bad effect on Easter plants. It will take all the sun we can get in the two remaining weeks to get the stock in shape. Allowlowing for the late and poor stuff there is then good reason to believe that we shall have enough lilies despite the predictions of scarcity. It seems likely that the bulk of the stock will bring $12 per 100 flowers; some will be held at $15 per 100, and some will go at $10 per 100. Azaleas will be plentiful, except Madame Van der Cruyssen. Hydrangeas, especially good ones, will be scarce. Crimson Ramblers will be very fine and fairly plentiful.

Rising Sun.

Godfrey Aschmann has his houses full to overflowing with Easter plants. He has lilies, azaleas, hydrangeas, daisies, spireas, hyacinths, tulips and daffodils, chiefly in medium and smaller sized pots. The visitor to this place will be much impressed with the wonderful quantity of stock grown in a limited space.

Notes.

Leo Niessen has added a new store on 13th street, making his capacity fully one-third larger. He is gradually getting this addition in shape, which is a great convenience for extra heavy shipments of stock. Some fine long stemmed Beauties from John Burton were seen here.

Myers & Deserable have dissolved partnership. The senior member of the firm continues the business at Mt. Airy, while the junior member is foreman for William Berger of Germantown.

Samuel S. Pennock will hold an Easter plant opening on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 17, 18 and 19, when plants, flowers and ribbons will be displayed during each day and evening.

Mignonette "Marvellous" (Michell's) is to be had at Leo Nissen's, and Jacqueminot roses at Eugene Bernheimer's.

Fred Habman, of Harrowgate Lane, says that he will be all right. He grows a good many hyacinths and tulips.

Julius Wolff, Jr., has a nice batch of lilies that will be just right for Easter; also a nice line of bulb stuff.

Wm. Graham, of Hugh Graham, was elected to council at the recent election. His opponent was W. Jennings, of Jennings Bros.

The Estelle carnation as grown by Wm. Wunder, of Pittville, is certainly a good one. Mr. Wunder will grow more of this variety next year.

Samuel J. Bunting, Elmwood Ave., and 58th St., has a fine lot of Easter stock in good shape, including 10,000 lilies.

The Bartram Greenhouses are turning out some very fine Kaiserin roses with 4-foot stems. They have been blooming all summer and are still at it. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The past week was almost a repetition of its predecessor in weather, low prices of stock and general depression in business. The beginning saw a cold snap, another blizzard and complete stagnation, and the closing days were as rainy and disagreeable as they could be. The low quotations of last week were not improved upon and everything was in excess of demand.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club's monthly meeting was well attended. The outing committee, through Mr. Wm. Elliott, reported the possible engagement of a suitable boat for the prospective outing of the club this summer.

The resignation of Mr. Wm. Plumb, on account of continued ill health, as manager of the flower show next fall, was accepted, and the club will undertake the management itself, placing the trade exhibit in charge of a competent assistant. The National Society of Sculptors indicated its willingness to cooperate with the Florists' Club in making a joint exhibit this fall, and everything points to a grand success.

Several new members were elected. Resolutions in memory of the father of Lawrence C. Hafner were reported and ordered sent to Mr. Hafner.

A vase of Gov. Wolcott carnations, sent by Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass., were an attraction, and the blooms scored 87 points. A shipment from the Chicago Carnation Co. did not arrive in time for exhibition.

Mr. Ward's stereopticon lecture on the carnation will be given on "Ladies' Night," and the club anticipates a large attendance.

Messrs. M. H. Norton, P. Welch and W. W. Edgar, Boston, were visitors, and favored the club with interesting addresses. These were followed by an address by Secretary Stewart on his trip to Asheville, with elaborate details about the southern "moonshine," the trip amongst the mountains, the glories of the early spring and the prospects for a grand convention next August. The beauties of "Biltmore" were described, and the magnificence of the mountain views evidently charmed the delegates beyond power of expression.

Mr. Wallace gave an eloquent description of the glory of the mountain scenery, the closeness of the "angels' feet" and the delightful southern hospitality.

Items.

Thorley received an order to keep the rooms of Prince Henry decorated during his return home on the Deutschland. The flowers are to be stored in the steward's cooling room till needed. Violets are to be used the first day, valley the second, carnations the third, and roses every other day during the voyage.

On Friday the Prince was entertained at the Mills mansion and the floral decorations were remarkably elaborate. Among the flowers used were 1,200 orchids, 1,500 long-stemmed American Beauty roses, 10,000 valley, and palms and smilax as accessories.

On Friday evening 1,400 Teutons greeted the Prince at the Waldorf-Astoria, and the decorations equaled those of the press banquet a week ago.

At the dinner given the Prince by Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Saturday evening, the decorations were arranged by Small & Sons. On the table the flowers were red camellias, with gardenias and daphne in the finger bowls. The other rooms were decorated with Beauties, Liberties, valley and acacia.

The meeting of the American Rose Society this week was a very interesting event. Some of the papers read appear elsewhere in this issue.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions for March 3-8.

With the assistance of the magnificent Prince Henry decorations things went off very well. These decorations probably far exceeded anything ever attempted before in the city and utilized a large amount of both local and imported material. The daily papers made much of an item of it, embellished with a fine picture of Mr. Galvin.

The bad weather has, of course, held back much material, so that prices have held up fairly well and goods have been generally well sold out, but naturally the reverse must be expected after a few sunshiny days, whenever they happen to come.

Items.

As a result of the freshet of Feb. 28, the boilers of F. W. Fletcher & Co., at Auburndale, were entirely submerged by water. One night there was no fire in the boilers, but after that, by using pumps night and day, with 18 men to man the same, the water has been kept below the fires. At present writing (March 8) there seems little less water than a week ago, although the water is being pumped out at the rate of 120,000 gallons a day. Mr. Fletcher believes the water comes from one of the city's drains and has filed a claim to that effect. The loss will amount to several hundred dollars, and this, following their $2,000 fire in December, seems a little like "piling it on."

For three years the sign "Penn, the Florist," has made us believe we had him safely "penned" in his small quarters on Chapman Place. But he breaks away and is fitting up new and more elegantly at 43 Bromfield street. This is partly because it is understood the building now sheltering him is to come down sooner or later, and partly because his rapidly increasing business demands it. Penn is a hard fellow to pen, but I think it safe to pen the prophecy of success in his developments.

Trade Exhibition.

It was all right and probably all that could be expected but was somewhat marred by the carnations being now off crop and generally a bit decrepit on account of bad weather. And the absence of Ward's usual large exhibit from Long Island was noticeable. Thus it became even more of a local affair than ever, emphasizing the fact that others do not care to compete with our specialists.

The affair was too cumbersome to be given in detail. There were many new seedlings staged and as good an exhibition of older varieties as the condition of the crop allows. However, no better vase of Lawsons was ever shown than that of M. E. Patten.

Among the new seedlings Fisher's "Enchantress" and "Gov. Wolcott" got the honors, but Warburton's "Cressbrook" was a most worthy antagonist to them both, while the three were so grand that other seedlings with good qualities could not well display themselves in such close comparison. The crop of Roper's "Fair Maid" is just now in bad shape to exhibit, but has taken first place at other times and places.

There is but little encouragement to exhibit along general lines, but considerable public spirit was shown in this respect. Robert Montgomery put up a vase of roses, Peirce one of mignonette, and several placed bunches of violets upon the boards. Sim's three varieties of singles being especially fine.

D. Hiffe was on hand with samples of his iron, as was the veteran horse-man, H. E. Hodgdon, who tells a pleasant hose-pipe dream about his "Plymouth Rock."

L. H. Foster attracted much attention with a new fern which he calls the Fosterianna, the two "n's" being complimentary to Mrs. Foster. The plant is of a peculiarly graceful branching habit, which Mr. Foster describes by saying that each pinna is like the main frond. He has no plants over a year old, but their size shows the plant to be fully as vigorous as the Bostoniensis. I think others will Foster its growth as quickly as possible.

The way in which exhibitors were booking orders for cuttings proves the financial value of the annual exhibition too. J. S. Manter.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Violent changes are the order of the day. Demand held up well till Tuesday, and then it was different, and prices have weakened again. The range on roses is now $2 to $7, with the great bulk of the stock selling at $3 to $6. Common carnations go at from $1.00 to $1.50, with some poor stock dropping as low as 75 cents, while fancies run from $2 to $2.50, only a few specials reaching $3.

Of Beauties there are very few of medium grades, but there is a fair supply of longs and plenty of shorts. The longest bring $5 a dozen and the shortest sell as low as $3 per 100.

The stretch of warm weather has of course increased the cut some, but the average of quality seems to be lower.

There is plenty of bulbous flowers and prices rule very low, except on a few specialties of extra good quality. Valley is holding its position best of all in this class. Dutch hyacinths and daffodils seem to suffer most. A few Harrisii lilies are seen. Of callas there is a great plenty and they seem to move very slowly.

Various Items.

The very elaborate decorations for the luncheon to Prince Henry at the Germania Club were arranged by Mr. E. Weinhoeber, and not by the Geo. Wittbold Co., as reported last week through an error.

The George Wittbold Co. are building three houses, each 27 ft. 4 in. by 300 ft., on their newly acquired land at Edgebrook. They are also building there a brick cottage and boiler house, and are digging a well, putting in roads, etc.

The injury to John Zeck's ankle was more serious than at first considered. He is now able to be about, but will be obliged to use a crutch for a week or so more.

The Chicago Wholesale Cut Flower Association is the title adopted by the organization recently formed, and the membership takes in practically every wholesaler in the city. The officers are: F. L. Benthey, Pres.; E. E. Pieser, Vice-Pres.; J. P. Risch, Sec'y.; E. C. Amling, Treas.

The regular weekly meeting of the association was held Tuesday, 15 out of a total of 16 firms being represented. During the session a committee from the Chicago Retail Florists' Protective Association, consisting of O. J. Friedman, C. A. Samuelson, W. Kidwell, W. J. Smyth, A. Lange, Leo Walz and J. Craig, was received. They presented a courteously expressed request for consideration of the alleged practice of the selling of flowers and designs in the wholesale market, such practice being held to be not only injurious to their individual interests but detrimental to the cut flower industry as a whole. A majority of the committee expressed their individual views on the same matter. The president of the Wholesale Association assured them that the matter would be taken up by that body for consideration at an early date and that a report would be made in due time.

The association agreed to issue a uniform weekly pricelist, which will appear hereafter in the trade journals. The general policy of the association has not been fully outlined yet but will be perfected at the next meeting.

Mr. B. Eschner, of M. Rice Co., Philadelphia, is in the city visiting the trade. He reports a very satisfactory business.

Mr. H. MacMichaels, for the past few years manager of the Morton Grove Greenhouses for Mr. P. Kreisman, has resigned his position and will soon start on a trip to Scotland and England. He will return in time to take charge of the greenhouses of Weiland & Risch at Evanston, June 1.

The new manager of the Morton Grove Greenhouses is Mr. Charles Duerr, a well-known local grower, formerly at Park Ridge.

The program of the club meeting Wednesday evening included an exhibition of plants suitable for Easter.

The Florists' Club will give an entertainment and dance the evening of April 8th, in the Drill Hall, Masonic Temple. A most enjoyable time is anticipated. The committee in charge consists of John Degnan, P. J. Hauswirth and E. Enders.

At Niles Center, F. Stielow has recently added a new house, 18x70 ft., using the Garland iron gutter, and Jacob Meyer has added one 24x100. The material for both houses was supplied by the John C. Moninger Co.

N. Weltor, Evanston, formerly a vegetable grower, is building a range of four houses, each 25x150, for the growing of cut flowers. The John C. Moninger Co. is supplying the material.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The cut flower market was rather lively the past week and, to our surprise, everything except bulb stock was considerably shortened up. The retail trade in decorations was very quiet, but in the cut flower line it was good, especially in funeral work.

There seems to be more crape pulling being done now than ever before. At one house no less than ten of these so-called florists presented their cards and each one was cheaper than the other. Any kind of work seems to please the public so long as it's cheap. One of the German papers of last week had a notice in it regarding one of these crape pullers which stated that artist so-and-so of North St. Louis had all the floral decorations. To call a shoemaker an artist in the floral line is hard to swallow.

The opening of the opera season at Century Theater the past week helped the trade a great deal as the first few nights a number of large bunches were presented to the favorites who have friends by the score in this city. Prices on stock went up a notch or two higher than the previous week. Roses of all kinds are not over-plentiful and good Brides and Maids sell for $5 per 100, and from that down to $2; Meteors and Perles are about the same; Beauties of the first grades are in good demand at $3 and $4 per dozen, but only a few of these grades come in; shorts are plentiful at from $2 to $5 per 100.

Carnations have shortened up some over the previous week, when a good many were dumped. Fancies are now bringing $3, and good stock sells at $2. Whites were in great demand all of the past week, and not half enough came in to supply the demand. Some very fine Marquis, Joost, Lawson and White Cloud were seen which sold well. More stock has been promised us for this week. Callas and Harrisiis sold great the past week, at 10 cents for callas, and 12½ cents for Harrisiis. Romans, tulips, valley, freesias and daffs are still plentiful and more are coming in than the demand warrants. Prices remain the same as last week on this stock. Violets went up a little in price and are selling this (Monday) morning for 40 cents per 100 for Californias, and 50 cents to $1 for doubles, with plenty of them to supply the demand.

Notes.

Mr. B. Eschner, representing M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, was a visitor last week. Mr. Eschner reports that trade was never better. Charlie Ford, representing A. Hermann, New York, was also a visitor.

Principal W. J. Stevens and his corps of teachers of Pope School will give the children a course of training in growing plants this spring. Each child will be given some flower seed to be planted in boxes, and prizes will be offered by the teachers of each class for the best box of plants. The children will be given a short talk each week on flower gardening. Principal Stevens says that when the planting season opens no less than 300 homes in the Pope School district will be supplied with flowers the coming summer through the interest which will be awakened among the children in home-beautifying.

Frederic W. Taylor, acting chief of the Department of Horticulture, has a letter out stating that his department desires to hear from the florists of the country in regard to what they wish to do individually in the way of exhibits at the coming St. Louis World's Fair. He asks that applications for such space be made at once so that exhibitors may have just what they wish in the way of area and location. Mr. Taylor also says that it has been freely admitted that one of the greatest attractions of the late Pan-American exposition was its outside flower show. Application blanks will be sent to any one addressing Frederic W. Taylor, Louisiana Purchase Exposition Co., St. Louis, Mo.

J. F. Ammann of Edwardsville, Ill., is making preparations for extensive improvements on his place this summer.

C. C. Sanders will build two new houses this summer, for roses and carnations.

Bowling.

The Florists league team went down three times last week before the Imperials. Beneke had to stay out of the game owing to a bad case of rheumatism. This week will end the league season with three games with the Enterprise, the leader of the race. The scores:

BUFFALO.

Easter.

We are naturaly hoping that Easter will be as good as, or even a better, flower festival than any that have gone before. Buffalo is well off for material, and if she was not we know of some very large supplies within a hundred miles that will send in any deficiency. I hope to find time to visit most all our growing establishments soon and give you a full report.

A Visit to Lancaster.

I did go out to Lancaster last week with Mr. J. A. Valentine, to run through the houses of W. J. Palmer & Son. They look fine. The dozen houses of carnations are looking well, and several large houses of Brides and Maids were giving a splendid cut of A 1 flowers. There is a house of Liberty there that is rather the best I have seen anywhere; of course, 2-year-old plants.

What impressed me as much as anything was a beneh of Japan longiflorum lilies, the most uniformly healthy I have come across this season, and are ready to pop open at a day's notice. To some eyes they may not have been surprising, but as I remarked last week, you see in so many places this year a ragged, uneven lot and afflicted with every disease that flesh or lilies are heirs to, except "housemaid knee," a disease confined to Europe, where the scrubbers of floors assume a creeping position. The whole place reflects the greatest credit on that modest, smiling, but hard-working young man, Mr. Barney Myers, who you can plainly see has his heart in his work.

Club Meeting.

The election of officers of the B. F. C. for the coming year went off very smoothly last Friday night. There was a score of the faithful present and several of them were from neighboring towns that necessitated a trolley ride of twenty miles and more, which ought to put to shame those who had but three blocks to walk but walked the other way. The club wisely elected as president James Braik, the Assistant Superintendent of Parks. His thorough horticultural knowledge, broad common sense and energy with which he takes hold of anything that he promises to do, gives the club a good outlook for the future. But the president alone cannot make the club, so now boys lend your help and weight in every way you can and you will never be sorry for it.

The vice-president is F. G. Lewis, of Lockport, who deserved the honor. The other officers were re-elected, as it is futile to try to get a more faithful and efficient secretary than Wm. Legg, a financial secretary than Emil Brucker, or treasurer than old war horse Charlie Keitsch. The executive committee are John F. Cowell, Wm. F. Kasting and W. Scott.

The program that followed was much enjoyed and President Braik got everybody to stand up and say something and all did with more or less volubility. The exquisite puns on the names of the members by Louis H. Neubeck was the gem of the evening. The most serious and serviceable thing done was the motion of Mr. Charles Guenther, as follows: "The Florists' Club of Buffalo tender to the florists of Indiana their congratulations on the splendid arrangements and manner in which the Carnation Convention was carried out in every detail, and our sincere thanks for the grand and cordial hospitality extended to the visitors." Carried with a cheer. And then we parted determined to make our club a real living being for the next year.

Death of Mrs. Wise.

I much regret to have to announce the rather sudden death of Mrs. Fred'k Wise, of East Aurora. She left behind two small children. Mr. Wise has the sympathy of all of us.

We Seldom Bowl.

I don't think the pages of a Florist and O. H. journal should be very much encumbered with bowling scores. It's all right when it's a national convention or two prominent cities have had a match, then we are interested, but merely practice rolls are of no interest outside of the club that is doing the rolling and they know what they have done. It's not scientific enough to go into print. It's merely a good muscular, good natured, jolly, noisy game, and without congenial society not worth a cent.

Buffalo and some of its individual bowlers have cut quite a figure in the national tournaments, but the glory seems departed and when at home we are a disjointed, non-sociable lot of dubs, and it requires a great effort to get six of us together. There alighted in our city last Saturday, much to our satisfaction, that breezy young colt from the Rockies, J. A. Valentine, of Denver, and we had two evening's bowling. J. A. has had the bowling microbe for some years and it's a steady and consistent attack, but not violent. When the bowling baeillus enters the brain it's by no means an indication that the eranium has space to spare or that its previous matter is addled or light in quantity or quality; not, in the least, for I have noticed among my acquaintances that some of the best endowed mentally have succumbed to violent attacks of "Bolomania." For instance there is our own good and weighty Capt. Braik, who would sacrifice almost all other earthly pleasures for a game. John Westcott, Robert Kift and the shrewd George Anderson consider it an esential and important duty of life to bowl. Pat O'Mara, with his head full of business and advanced moral philosophy, loves to join in. I could cite a hundred cases to prove that the brighter a man is at his calling, whatever it may be, the better he is at his favorite pastime, and there are any amount of instanees showing that a very bright mind is often able to excel in any games of skill that they tackle.

These few introduetory remarks, Mr. Editor, are my exeuse for asking you to print the scores of a game we had last Tuesday evening. Mr. Valentine played a brilliant game on Saturday night but on Tuesday night he fell down, and going home borrowed the score which I had kept on the back of a postal card. He is a crafty coyote from over the divide, but I will spare him this time and from memory here is the score that he made when he laid us out, not when we laid him out:

J. A. Valentine	160	191	186	172
W. F. Kasting	—	—	160	170
G. McClure	190	181	223	204
M. Bloy	132	163	140	174
W. Belsey Scott	152	178	180	171
D. L. ditto	111	117	138	140
Aleck ditto	147	136	164	180
R. Burns ditto	140	124	138	135
O. Goldsmith ditto	120	117	111	122
Old Man ditto	164	144	189	210

Unfortunately the other members of our family were out of town. But, oh, boys! if those Palace Alleys had only been built when you were all here! There are as good perhaps in other cities, there cannot be better. They are a glorious, smooth, glittering dream.

JOHNSON & STOKES, 217-219 Market St., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Bright, spring-like weather is with us again, and although good stock is rather scarce the outlook from now on is very good. Easter being so near at hand the wise florist is beginning to look about for novelties, etc., with which to attract the public eye, and nicely gotten up show windows are the result. What will be the condition of the market at Easter is a hard question to answer, but one thing is already assured, and that is that we will have more stock than ever before for this holiday. More stock and better stock and every one should be satisfied.

The past week did not bring forth any great rush of business, in fact things moved along in a rather slow fashion and prices had a tendency to go towards the cellar. A good supply of funeral work formed the main cause of demand and helped things out greatly. In the latter part of the week things brightened up a trifle and by Saturday most all kinds of stock, with the exception of bulbous, especially Jonquils and Von Sions, was cleared out and at rising prices.

Roses were not in quite so heavy supply as last week, as several large growers are off crop, but the quality of the stock was not very good, the percentage of seconds and thirds being ahead of the firsts. Brides, Maids, Meteors, Perles, Golden Gates, brought $2 to $6. But by far the majority sold slow at the former figure. Brides sold best, as is usual at this time of year. Second Maids were the hardest to move and a good many went at job lot prices.

As has been the fact for the greater part of this season first-class carnations had the best call. Those medium fancy varieties are the ones and they sold well; $3 was the average price obtained; ordinary grades, $1.50 to $2 per 100. In colors white had the call, but a good red was rapidly snapped up. Good red carnations have been rather scarce all this season. Bulbous stock met with but fair demand, but there was nothing slow about the supply and good Romans could be had at 1½c to 2c. Tulips, 2c to 3c. Some fancy double tulips reached 4c. Violets are becoming a drug, except for the very best. The single varieties meet with much better demand than the double and bring a better price. Many of the latter kind sold at $1.50 to $2 per 1,000. Good single ones brought 35c to 50c per 100 and were well cleaned up.

Various Items.

B. P. Critchell had the decoration for the banquet held in the Chamber of Commerce building, to celebrate the 100th anniversary of Cincinnati as a city. There were 500 persons present.

Prince Henry's twenty-minutes' stay in this city did not tend to make a scarcity in the visible supply of floral stock. But he was given quite a reception.

Robt. D. Ruttle, Covington, Ky., was very busy during the past week.

Chas. Jones has placed a large plate glass window in his Fourth street store, replacing the old-style one.

Wm. Murphy is showing a new carnation. It is a white seedling, parentage Bridesmaid and McGowan. He does not claim honors as a fancy for it, but says it is a producer. It has a long stiff stem, does not seem inclined to burst. A flower that will measure 2½ to 3 inches, and from present outlook it is O. K. for a good commercial flower.

Harry Edwards is hard at work fixing up his Vine street store. A new ice box is being built and in a short time he will have a very attractive place.

Visitors were: E. J. Fancourt, representing Samuel S. Pennock, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mr. Weltz, Wilmington, O.; C. Ford, New York.

A meeting of the Florists' Society was held Saturday night at its club rooms. There were discussions of various questions in reference to the future actions of the society but nothing of importance was acted upon. C. J. Ohmer.

We have received a copy of Class Bulletin No. 12 of the Division of Horticulture of the University of Minnesota, St. Anthony Park, Minn., designed for the use of students. It contains 72 pages, is very freely illustrated and the lessons seem to be of a very practical character. The titles of the lessons in the bulletin are: Large seeds vs. small seeds, Seed sowing in boxes, Plant feeding with nitrogen, Pollination of flowers, Plants from cuttings, Corrosion of marble by roots, Grafting, Budding, Potting, Vitality of seeds, Purity test of seeds, Pricking out, Treatment to prevent potato scab, Bordeaux mixture, Spray pumps, Packing nursery stock, Use of garden seed drills and hand cultivators, Heeling in, Planting out, Pruning and methods of winter protection. Such a series of lessons could not fail to be very helpful to beginners. It is evident that the Horticultural Division of the Minnesota University is doing good and practical work.

VALUE OF ROTTED TAN-BARK.

Please tell me through the Review what value (if any) there is in old tan-bark that has been rotting in a pile for 20 years or more. How will it compare with leaf mould from oak trees? It is twice the weight and seems to me more beneficial as a mulch for vegetables in the open ground. Would it do for ferns or Asparagus plumosus?

IGNORAMUS.

In answer to Ignoramus would say that I was brought up in a garden where many loads of fresh tan-bark were used every year, but only as a material to plunge pineapples in pots. Never saw the old material after being quite rotten used in any way except as a mulch. For that, it is undoubtedly of use. I remember it was used for mulching strawberries and for plunging plants in pots out of doors. If this old rotten bark possessed any of the qualities of leaf mould I have every confidence that those big headed men of fifty years ago would have found a use for it. And, although no chemist, I can say without any fear of contradiction that it possesses none of the fertilizing or nutritious qualities of leaf mould. The idea that tan-bark when thoroughly decomposed should be of the same use as genuine leaf mould is by no means a new dream or original. The writer asked himself the question years ago and doubtless hundreds have done the same. I quote in conclusion an extract from the Dictionary of Gardening: there is certainly no better authority:

Tan or Tanners' Waste.

Analysis shows that the nitrogenous matter of the fresh bark is almost entirely removed from it in the process of extracting the tannin, while some of the tannin remains and hinders decay of the refuse. Nearly half of the weight of the tan is water and the ash or mineral compounds in the tan consist very largely of carbonate of lime and of silica, the valuable phosphates and potash salts being present in it in only very small quantities. If employed as manure, tan should be made up into a compost with earth, lime and farmyard manure and the whole should be saturated occasionally with liquid manure and allowed to ferment for a considerable time before using.

All of which to me shows the wonderful value of tan refuse about as much as the quality of that muddy, voracious fish called carp, which an old English aristocrat sized up so accurately when he said that the best way to cook carp was to boil it in port-wine and then throw it away. W. S.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

It was expected that Lent would lessen the demand for cut flowers, but, for all one can see, it has had no effect upon sales, which continue steady and firm.

The demand for carnations about equals the supply, while roses are a trifle scarce. There is plenty of bulb stock to be had and the demand is good. Lilies will be fair for Easter, but in very short supply. There will be a good supply of Crimson Ramblers, American Beauties in pots, any amount of bulbs in pans and pots, and plenty of azaleas.

On the homeward trip from the carnation meeting the Grand Rapids florists were in the Monroe wreck. Henry Smith was badly bruised and is still in the hands of his doctor; Crabb had a leg and a hand badly bruised; the Hannah boys escaped without a scratch.

Recent visitors: Mr. McHutchinson, H. B. Beatty, of W. W. Barnard & Co.; Chas. Schwake, of Hagemann & Meyer, and A. L. Vaughan, of E. H. Hunt.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

The semi-monthly meeting of the New Haven County Horticultural Society was held at the First National Bank Building, Tuesday evening, March 4. There was a large attendance of members and friends. A preliminary schedule for the fall show was discussed and adopted. P. Menzies, W. T. Simons and M. Dingwall were elected to membership.

John Doughty read an able and instructive essay on the history and cultivation of the tuberous rooted begonia. Mr. Doughty also read a splendid paper on the cultivation of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. At the same time he exhibited a beautiful specimen of same, for which he was awarded a certificate of merit.

THE GOOD & REESE CO.,

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

THE LARGEST ROSE GROWERS IN THE WORLD.

AWARDING PRIZES.

In a recent issue of the Review Mr. Scott referred to the failure of the judges at Indianapolis to award first premium to a vase of flowers that were certainly fine enough to be worthy of it. Mr. Scott is right in saying that such decisions deter exhibitors from competing in future exhibitions. When prizes are offered for first, second and third best entries, I can see no justice in failing to give the best one first prize, unless of course it is very poor.

I note that firsts were withheld in quite a few classes at many of the floral exhibitions. I would like to know if this is to be a general practice. Are the judges to blame, or are they acting under instructions from the clubs and societies offering the premiums?

Of course I don't advocate giving premiums to inferior flowers of any kind, but where the standard is as high as it was at Indianapolis the premiums offered should certainly have been awarded. Exhibitor.

HOLBROOK, MASS.

Florists in this vicinity are saying little and working steadily. Lively & Bond have added another house, which is nearly finished, to their already sizeable plant and are great hustlers in the carnation business.

Frank T. White is doing a large business in bulbs and keeps a good quantity in the market daily. He has also been very successful in growing Lady Campbell violets, for which he always has a ready demand.

Anthony G. Hanna's carnation houses are looking fine and he has great success in growing Ethel Crocker and Eldorado of the highest grade, though many growers in this vicinity have thrown those varieties out as unsatisfactory. He has also a large stock of fine cinerarias which are going rapidly in the Boston market.

We hear that M. L. Belcher, at the north end of the town, contemplates adding more glass to his plant this spring.

Messrs. A. Dietsch & Co., Chicago, have received a large number of orders for their short roof style of houses. Amongst others the Henry A. Dreer Co., Philadelphia, have ordered twelve of these houses, each 150 feet long.

Don't fail to have an adv. in our special spring number, to be issued next week.

BERLIN, ONT.

The Rosehurst Conservatories have again changed hands, this time passing from Mr. A. H. Ewing to Mr. C. H. Janzen, son of Mr. H. L. Janzen, the florist and nurseryman.

This establishment was first started by a music teacher who was imbued with the idea that music and flowers ought to harmonize and go hand in hand. He found no difficulty in establishing harmony between music and flowers. The perplexing part was to harmonize the two accounts. He found to his dismay that a shortage in his flower account had to be made good from his music account. He finally leased the premises, but the lessee also failed to establish harmony between receipts and disbursements and left for more promising fields.

The place was then sold to that genial, whole-souled gentleman, Mr. A. H. Ewing, lately superintendent of the Normal School conservatories, Toronto, and secretary of the Canadian Florists' Association. Mr. Ewing modernized the plant by introducing steam heating and erecting two neat carnation houses. The place was filled with a select stock of choice plants that were kept in prime condition. But the conditions by which Mr. Ewing found himself surrounded were against him. The place was surrounded by buildings and there was no room for expansion. It proved too large for one man to properly attend to and yet too small to support a competent assistant. The outcome was financial failure. The town is really not large enough to support two up-to-date establishments. The old saying that there is always room for one more may hold good on a street car, but it won't always apply to business.

We understand that Mr. Ewing has bright prospects of securing a good appointment in Toronto and his friends here all wish him success.

Mr. F. Kemminski, who was foreman for H. L. Janzen for twelve years, is in very poor health and there is little hope of his ultimate recovery. In 1895, he, in company with H. Stansburg, rented Mr. Janzen's place for a term of five years. At the expiration of the lease Mr. K. purchased the place and built three houses, equipping the same with hot water heating. He now finds himself unable to continue the business and has sold out to H. L. Janzen. The latter intends to dismantle the houses, as well as those formerly conducted by Mr. Ewing, and will use the material in connection with the new range of houses to be erected on his place the coming summer. Heinrich.

MRS. POTTER PALMER

SCARLET.

Certificated at Indianapolis; Chicago Florists' Club; St. Louis; Montreal; Chicago Horticultural Society; Kansas City Flower Show, and as we are showing it at different Florists' Clubs throughout the country, at the present time, it is CREATING a most favorable impression. We could print dozens of letters from secretaries of Clubs and others telling us of the fine condition in which they arrived and CONGRATULATING us on having such a fine scarlet carnation.

MR. JOHN MANGEL, perhaps the largest retail florist in Chicago, says it is the FINEST CARNATION that ever came in his store. He is paying us double the price for it that he pays for the best LAWSONS in the Chicago market. However, our claim for it is as a free bloomer; we have been cutting from it since last September and the plants at the present time are LOADED with BUDS AND FLOWERS, hundreds of them bearing twenty-five to thirty-five stems. It is our best SHIPPER, brings best PRICE, best SELLER, best BLOOMER of any scarlet we ever grew. If others can grow it as we do it will be a young GOLDMINE to them; we shall let them know how to do it. Place your orders now as they are going fast. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

MRS. HIGINBOTHAM

LIGHT PINK.

Certificated at Indianapolis; Chicago; Kansas City; St. Louis; is the best carnation of any in the Fall; is as good as any after; sells on sight, color and stem and fragrance are PERFECT; destined to become the STANDARD light pink. 40,000 sold in six weeks, mostly to florists who have seen it growing. We were obliged to cut down nearly all our plants to get ENOUGH cuttings for the demand, of course this took the strength from the flowers, which are not quite as large now as they were about Christmas, but we have FILLED all our orders and have another batch of fine stock READY. It will become the standard SUMMER BLOOMER for pink. Don't wait until Fall, buy now. $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Chicot. Large white, slightly penciled with pink, this also has been certificated at various places and is more profitable than any standard carnation on our place; has a better constitution; never splits; has more fragrance. As it is not an extra fancy we are offering it at a reduced rate, viz.: $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

Bon Homme. White, the greatest producer, the best stem and the best shipper; finest form and most profitable white carnation on the market to-day. $4.00 per 100; $30.00 per 1000.

Prosperity. Largest and finest; color, white overlaid with pink; blooms sell now for $1.00 per dozen, wholesale; can be grown at a good profit. We shall double our planting of this for next season. We have an extraordinary fine stock of it. Strong plants from soil $5.00 per 100; $40.00 per 1000.

Joost. Good commercial pink, strong stock from soil. $2.00 per 100; $12.50 per 1000.

Maceo. Freest crimson, fine plants from soil. $1.50 per 100; $12.50 per 1000.

Lawson. (The great.) Stock saved especially for ourselves. Strong and stocky, from soil. $4.00 per 100; $35.00 per 1000.

Crane. Scarlet, from soil. $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

Norway. Fanciest white, great stock, from soil. $5.00 per 100; $40.00 per 1000. Write us for prices on large quantities of these and other varieties which we have.

Cressbrook. (Warburton's new pink.) A winner everywhere. We can furnish the best stock of this variety and all other new ones.

If you want fine Carnation Blooms for Easter write us. Ours were never better than at the present time. We can fill all orders at market rates.

Read This. HER MAJESTY (white); HARLOWARDEN (crimson); MARSHALL FIELD (variegated,) are our next season's novelties. We have booked orders for thousands of these for delivery next year to some of the best judges in the business. You do not have to place your order now, but now is a good time to look into their respective merits, then keep a sharp look out for them next Fall.

AMLING wants your—
EASTER Order

THERE ARE MANY REASONS WHY HE OUGHT TO HAVE IT.

DO YOU EVER put two and two together? The results are often interesting. Just after Christmas there was great "to do" about pickled stock. You remember it; the trade papers were full of it. Read the reports from a man who divided his order:

From American Florist, January 7, 1902.

Ed. Am. Florist:—It is absolutely necessary to hold back some of the cut before each holiday to meet increased demands. But at the same time I have been caught every year. This year I had a shipment from one of the leading growers, C. O. D. $260, on which I did not realize $200 because half the stock was too old. But what is the use of kicking.
St. Paul, Minn. A. S. SWANSON.

From a Business Letter, January 12, 1902.

E. C. Amling. Dear Sir:—Please accept enclosed check for $500 on account. At the same time allow me to compliment you on the way you filled our Christmas order. I must say the goods were all "O. K.," first-class. Am only kicking myself for not having had more of my stuff come from you. We were well pleased. My wife said every flower was perfect. St. Paul, Minn. A. S. SWANSON.

WERE YOU SATISFIED with your Christmas supplies? Come to us for Easter and you'll get what you want, as you want it and when you want it. Our facilities are perfect and our crops are on. LET US HAVE YOUR ORDER NOW.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Easter Chat.

There is an all-powerful something about the approach of Easter that inspires and elevates all life. Nature not only imparts a beauty with every growth and hue of her awakening, but mankind is enthused with new hopes and higher ambitions. There is a universal feeling of generosity which spends itself in the presentation of plants and flowers as tokens of regard. It is well that all who are in the florist business should grasp the intent and the full force of this festival. Unlike at Christmas, with its snows and winter gales, flowering plants seem to be especially appropriate at Easter, with its sweet, soft breath of spring, and if in the trials and troubles attending the handling of extra stock, there is a strong desire to grumble, it might be well to remember that people cause much of their own difficulties. It is always wiser to stop and think than indifferently rush into the unknown.

We have said in a previous chat that this will be a great Easter for plants and flowers. The people have money to spend and the future of the country justifies even the poorest to indulge in the luxury of flowers. A mistake is generally made by the florists who imagine that the people will pay any price asked and that they must make enough money at Easter to tide them over the summer months. Whenever business is good, there is a wild desire to stop it by overcharging, and the consequence is lost trade and general disappointment. Of course there are quite a lot of people who appreciate a thing only when the cost is high, but this class are fast dwindling down. It is the general custom for the retailer to double the price charged by the grower, which is fair, but many treble and quadruple it, which is unwise, unless in the case of novelties or wealth of trimmings.

We have just returned from a trip among the principal Eastern plant growers, and the average quality of their stock is not equal to that of other Easters. Lilies are very dwarf and that is undesirable in a large degree; they will have to be arranged in larger groups in order to be presentable to city customers. We have referred to the making up of lilies in pots and tubs in a previous paper. All we can add is that we consider it unwise to offer them at so much per flower and bud; it is better to say that this pot of lilies is such a price. Many, as you know, have but one or two flowers open, and people don't like to pay for buds. There should be no paper or trimmings put on a lily pot; it is always more beautiful and significant in a clean pot, tub or basket. A light blue, pink, yellow or white ribbon can be used as sash and bow, and many ribbons will have "Easter Greetings" painted on the ends.

There is a growing demand for and an increasing supply of large Azalea indica. Large azaleas in good condition are a favorite Easter plant in the big cities; so are rhododendrons. Strange to say that particularly in the case of the latter there is an absence of size and form so desirable to the American trade. In the case of azaleas there are a few very dwarf growing varieties, and no matter how small the plants of these may be, they are invaluable for basket work. You can exercise all your desire for trimming on azaleas, but the simpler is the cheapest and most often the best. To dress these plants like huge paper dolls may be attractive to some eyes, but it's a cruel joke on the harmless plants. A mistake is often made by trimming plants at night without matching colors by daylight. This accounts for some of the awful combinations seen even in the palace stores.

Rose plants will be popular, providing they are in good sizes. We are going to use dark green matting to cover the boxes (that is, where they are growing in flats). A great many will be made up in rose baskets and many will prefer them in clean pots. Roses will stand for a bow of bright ribbon. Hydrangeas promise to be good sellers again, and those we have seen are in good condition. There is no fixing necessary on these plants. There is a large assortment of plants to select from, too numerous to specially describe. You have all bought the majority of your Easter stock by this time, and it is only our desire to point out how they can be arranged most attractively. It is none too early to make a display of a few good examples of what you will offer Easter week. Many people go around buying presents long before the time for delivery, and if they see nice things in the window they are apt to purchase. They will at least remember.

There is nothing specially new or novel in plants. The chief attraction will be your own handiwork. The plant baskets permit you to create all the novelty you can get up, and a vast amount of small plants can be used profitably. In all your arrangements, aim for harmony, fullness and finish. You will get many plants that are growing in too large sized pots. There is nothing so bad, except it be the poorness of the plant itself. There is a chance to display all your skill in arranging the plants in your store Easter week. We believe in grouping each variety together as much as possible and to so put the colors that they will bring out the full beauty of all; made-up work should be elevated and made to stand out prominently.

The beauty of your work is lost where all is jammed together and customers see but a mass of blooms, not the pretty basket or pot you have taken so much trouble to fix, and which they would often buy had they seen it to advantage.

Many adopt the plan of putting prices on all their plants; this is a dangerous thing to do, for in the rush the price tag is often left on. Of course all manner of help is put into service during a rush, but it often occurs that you can get more for your goods from one than the other, and where all have a general idea of the values it is best to leave tags off. We know very few will agree with us on this point, but they will be compelled to admit that if the customer knew that the price tag went with their present there would be no sale. Water, and plenty of it, dispensed with common sense, is absolutely necessary to keep your plants in good condition, and it is false economy to begrudge to pay for experienced help.

It isn't absolutely necessary to use soil when making up your plant baskets.

An Easter Plant Arrangement.

Soil is heavy and a nuisance in the store. Wet moss will suffice, and it is good to get it ready now. We saw many simple baskets during the week that will go well if properly filled. The day of high colored fancy baskets is gone; plain colored simple ones will lead this time. Very high handles will be used for roses, and you can untwine a Crimson Rambler and fix the handle with it. Don't forget that a loose spray here and there will add to the beauty of a design.

Flat baskets of all manner of plants, such as primroses, bulbous flowers, ferns, small palms, etc., will sell well. Put a dash of color in the form of short high bows of ribbon at the side or on the handles. Many thousands of the different kinds of cut flowers can be used in baskets in this way. Fix up a basket of green plants; you can make some variegated; insert a cheap vase among the plants and fill it with a bunch of spring flowers in one color, others in variety. Use ribbons to match the flowers. Stock made up like this is not wasted; you merely display it in a catchy way, instead of leaving it all in the icebox. Some will make a specialty of automobile, caravan and sedan chair baskets; others will bring forward egg-shaped vases. A large variety is necessary in some stores, but most florists need only offer good plants at a fair price to do a big trade. Though trimmings will add brightness to your stock, the people care more for the quality and price of the plant itself.

An Easter Plant Arrangement.

Easter brings an annual crop of what may be called "mushroom" florists, speculators who open vacant stores to sell plants that week only. Some effort should be made to protect the interests of legitimate florists from that element.

Now, as regards ribbons. Of course you can use up anything you have in stock. This is a good time to get rid of all the remnants. Dealers will naturally try to sell whatever they have, but we are going back to the one-colored ribbon. Gauzy and fancy striped effects have had their day, unless on such things as ericas, boronias, epacris and a few others requiring light treatment. Gauze ribbon is more or less a failure; that is, it requires too much of it to make a show. We always prefer taffetas for most plant work, because you can make better bows with it. Flat bows are next to useless on most stock; you need to have the semi-high bow in order to make the ribbon show prominently among foliage or flower. Satin ribbon will be used in large quantity and mahne and others will be good for variety's sake, but the principal run will be in good colors in plain self and soft hued effects. Need no longer put a bolt of ribbon on a plant; just enough to give it a festive touch or add color. Baby ribbons and tassels will be used to finish off bows, and some in exceptional cases will again tie special cut-flower boxes with bright taffeta broad ribbons; that is, the sizes from 16 to 80 and over will be the most generally used.

These fancy affairs run into big money; better be careful how you use them. There is a vast quantity of stock bought for Easter that is never used and in the mad rush lots of stuff is spoiled. The trimming table should be kept clean and dry, with some one to keep the stock from being mussed up. Some people will slash water and put dirty pots on everything. Cleanliness saves stock and is a general necessity in all florists' establishments. Get as many of your orders out on Saturday as you can. Cut flowers take up first place on delivery Sunday. When a plant is sold, try to finish the tagging and carding and other fixing at once; tie it up and put it in the delivery route. A little planning now will save much trouble and expense later.

The shipping department is an all-important institution, requiring a cool head in charge. Everyone has their system of handling a rush of trade. The simpler, the more practical. The least handling of papers and plants, the better. A neat pocket order pad and rubber bands for card and sheets are good to have. Don't have all the little necessities stuck in one place at the end of the store. Some people are very haughty and demand quick service. This can only be done by alertness and having things accessible.

Many stores would be more attractive and show plants to more advantage were a case of smilax judiciously used, both on the exterior and interior. Clear away all the useless furnishings and give your customers space to examine the plants. There will be a few of the over sensible who will prefer to send a Boston fern or a palm or Pandanus Veitchii. Might be well to have one or two in evidence, and we forgot to mention that Crimson Ramblers trained in the shape of standing crosses are to be had in limited quantities, and that these are most appropriate for churches and cemeteries, and, by the way, it will be well for some to have a galax wreath or cross made up ready for immediate shipment.

Clean wooden boxes, both for cut flowers and plants, to ship out of town, is another important thing to consider ahead. Most of you know what a nuisance it is to work with an old saw at the last precious moment. Be good to the weather man, and in your dealings remember you are in business 365 days and as many nights in the year.

CARNATIONS.

Saving Carnations for Easter.

One of the main questions confronting us just now is: How to get as large a supply of bloom as possible for Easter without diminishing the quality of our stock? That we must save up our blooms for a few days in order to meet the extra demand is quite certain, as even a spell of hard forcing would not bring out enough blooms if they were sent in and disposed of in the regular way. So the question is, How to handle the cut for at least a week previous to Easter so as to have an extra supply of blooms, and to have them in as good condition as if they had opened up only the day before?

After the holidays there were a good many complaints about pickled stock and still more about carnations not keeping well and it can all be traced right back to the forcing and pickling that was done just prior to the holidays. Every year we hear of many cases where the blooms cut for a month after Christmas were too soft for any use, just because the houses were handled improperly prior to that time. It seems impossible to make some growers understand that it is not a waste of fuel to have the ventilators up an inch while they are keeping up steam in the pipes and that especially is this true when the temperature is run several degrees higher than usual. Of course I do not mean to advocate keeping the ventilators up right along during zero weather, when it keeps us hustling to keep the temperature up to the proper figure. But I do advocate opening the ventilators at every opportunity, when it can be done without pushing the boilers too hard. We often have spells during the winter when we must keep up steam both day and night for lack of sunshine and we always make it a rule to raise the ventilators an inch or two at least a few hours each day, to change the air in the house, and we know that it pays us well. Sleepy carnations will be an unknown quantity where this is practiced.

This, however, is not always the reason why carnation blooms do not keep well after they reach the store. When the retailer learns to pay for freshness rather than for enormous size he will have less trouble in that line. The present demand for size naturally causes the grower to allow the blooms to stand until they are fully developed and often over-developed before he sends them in. Such blooms will not stand handling as well as blooms that are less matured. If the retailers were willing to pay the same price for the blooms when they are about three-fourths developed as he does when they have their fullest size he would have less occasion to complain of sleepy carnations.

One who handles carnations in any quantity can tell at a glance whether a bloom has just unfolded its petals or whether it has reached its fullest size. No grower will send in his blooms before they are full grown when he knows that he can make at least 25 per cent by allowing them to remain on the plants a day longer, but he would be only too glad to send them in if he could get the same price for them and know that they give better satisfaction all around. We occasionally have a bunch of large, fully developed blooms shoved under our nose with an invitation to compare them with ours, which are just opened. We do not mind it any more, as we have learned that the suggestion to place a few blooms of each lot in water for three days and then compare them invariably causes a back-down by the aforesaid gentleman.

Much of the poor, sleepy stuff seen at Christmas and Easter has been saved up too long. While we believe it to be necessary and possible to save up most of our cut of a week previous to these days, we also find that it takes a great deal of judgment and a thorough knowledge of each variety to keep the bloom in good condition for so long a time. By saving up the bloom a week I do not mean to stop cutting two weeks ahead and to cut clean every bloom that is open a week later, and store them in the cellar another week. We usually let up sending the blooms in about one week ahead of the date they are wanted, and cut the blooms as they need to be cut, and store away in a cool, dry cellar. Some of the varieties need to be cut almost as soon as the petals are unfolded, while others must be left on a day or two longer. For instance, many of the delicate pink varieties should be cut before the sun bleaches them, while others, that unfold with a rather deep color, will bleach into much prettier shades after being open a day or two. Nearly all the whites become purer after a day or two.

After taking them into the cellar you should look over the blooms every day, changing the water and clipping the stems. There will be many blooms that will not keep in good condition as long as you intended and you can send them in and get a good price for them if you do it in time, certainly more than they will be worth if you keep them with the rest. There is always more or less of a shortage of good stock during the week before Christmas and Easter.

Be sure there is no aphis on your plants when you begin saving up the blooms. You do not want to fumigate the houses while there is a lot of open blooms on the plants, and it will not be necessary if you see that the plants are clean at the start and you give a light fumigation then. Don't fumigate strong, as it will take the color out of the nearly open buds, but rather repeat a mild fumigating two or three times, which will do the work just as well.

A. F. J. Baur.

ROSES.

To be in good condition for planting in May or early in June, young stock should be shifted into 3-inch pots soon after Easter. This gives them time to form nice stocky plants and to fully ripen their wood before planting time. When shifting from 2½-inch to 3-inch pots the soil should be passed through a half-inch screen; the shift being so small requires that the soil be fine so that it can be packed evenly around the ball.

It is also better to give ample drainage at this potting, as they will now require copious supplies of water and more syringing to keep spider in check. The ball should be placed about the same depth in the pot as it was before and the soil packed evenly and firmly around it. If treated in this way the plants will be of a uniform stockiness, which they can never attain if potted loosely and deep.

Though Meteors require a high temperature during their flowering season, they do not require it while young. A temperature of 56 degrees at night and 70 degrees on bright days makes more robust and healthy stock. They should not be subjected to the higher temperature till the plants are fully established and the bench fairly well filled with roots. Beauties, Kaiserins and Golden Gates succeed equally well while young in the same temperature. As soon as potted, the plants should be watered till the soil is thoroughly moistened.

The sudden changes in the outside temperature which we may expect during the next two months will test the skill of the grower to keep his stock free from the attacks of mildew. Care and good judgment in ventilating so that the temperature of the house undergoes no sudden change and keeping the house free from draughts will keep the stock hardy, healthy and consequently less liable to be attacked. Ribes.

ROSE SOIL—DEFORMED BEAUTY BUDS.

As it is impossible for me to procure old rotted cow manure to mix with my rose soil, I would like to know if I could not use cow manure made this winter to mix with the sod soil. If turned over several times before the end of May, would it be safe to plant roses in such a soil by June 1?

Why do my American Beauty roses have 50 per cent deformed buds, and how can I prevent this? The plants are healthy and strong. C. G.

By keeping out all rank litter and heavy corn stalks, the manure made during the past winter can be used with all safety. After piling up sod with the requisite proportion of manure, it should remain in that condition for about three weeks before being chopped; turning it over twice at intervals of ten days will bring it into excellent condition.

At this particular season there are always a percentage of malformed Beauty buds, especially on the weakly older wood. This is caused by the plants diverting the greater part of their vitality to forming strong new canes. If the deformed buds are on the new canes, the trouble may arise from an attack of thrips, which usually begin to be plentiful about this time. Overfeeding and irregular watering also causes distorted buds. Ribes.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Easter Stock.

The days of March have been in most localities very favorable for the advancement of all our Easter stuff, but a change is on and we may get dark and stormy weather for several days to come; it would be nothing unusual, at any rate in the lake region. No one can hit it just right with every plant of every kind, but with some thoughtful manipulation almost all the stock can be of service at the desired time, and with most of us there is a great difference in value between a lily, a Rambler or an azalea on the Saturday before Easter and two days later.

Two weeks ago I attempted to give you some hints on the care of our leading Easter plants should they be too early. If not early enough, heat, with the blessing of sunshine, is all you can do. Lilies will not only keep a week, but two weeks, in first-class shape, if put in a cool shed with little light, or even in a shaded house with a low temperature. Azaleas will do under a bench in a cool house, if you don't have a cool shaded house, but if you put them under a bench throw some tissue paper over them. Some varieties of azaleas, notably the favorite Van der Cruyssen, have such a mass of bloom that they can scarcely get all the room to expand, and if a little early, the first opened flowers can be plucked off, for there are lots more buds to open. I have put lilacs into a cool, moist cellar and kept them ten days in excellent order after they had been fully out.

To our surprise, the hybrid roses, as well as the Ramblers, have come along too fast; but two weeks in a night temperature of 45 degrees will not hurt them, but rather help them, and the flowers will be larger and a much better color. The rather unprofitable spiraea, or Astilbe Japonica, which is more correct (and there are now several varieties) is just about right. If they stood in 7 or 8-inch pans and the pans kept supplied with liquid manure, it will help them greatly. Bulbous stock of all kinds is easily retarded if necessary, but really, hyacinths, tulips and narcissus should be well out, or they do not attain their full size. Several other pretty plants, such as deutzia, rhododendron, cytisus, metrosideros and acacia, are all cold-blooded plants, and a week in a quite cool house will only be of benefit to them.

Be Ready.

Now there is no doubt that in point of quantity and value there are more plants handled at Easter than at any other day or week of the year, and it is a busy, laborious time, and sometimes on the Saturday afternoon, if business is good, people buying, and you have five or six wagonloads promised to be delivered that evening, you are likely to feel overwhelmed with work, but it pays to keep cool, and by good organization, division of labor and system you can help things wonderfully. One of the greatest helps to getting a lot of work and business done is to leave nothing that can be done on Monday till the Tuesday, and keep ahead of your work, and every possible job that can be done four or five days ahead must never be neglected.

You are sure that all desirable, pretty plants that are in the right condition will sell, and there is no earthly reason why every pot should not be washed if needed. It is not fair to send a lot of plants, even to a retail florist, with greasy pots. They have less convenience and time than you have, and as for sending a private customer a plant with a dirty pot, even if it is trimmed with paper—it is outrageous, and belongs to a past age. Our plants are beautiful objects and they are going into homes of elegance and refinement, and slovenly, shabby or dirty conditions will not be tolerated.

How much decorating and trimming of plants will be done this year I don't pretend to know, but it's likely there will be as much as ever. How far you are warranted in trimming up plants ahead of time, and the quantity, you are the best judge yourself. The retailer who has only a store will do well to have most all his offerings fixed up with crepe paper and ribbon, for it unmistakably helps to sell the plant. The greenhouse retailer need not go into it so early or extensively, but he must have a few of every kind as samples to let the customers see how beautifully they can be embellished. Don't undervalue the great incentive it is to people to purchase when they see a beautiful plant tastily fixed up with paper and ribbon. It sells many a plant that would otherwise be left to waste its fragrance on store or greenhouse air. Our goods are not necessities of life; they are the luxuries and extravagances, and if they are not attractive they won't attract.

Two years ago I was writing and advising that your show house should not be a jumble of everything, and although that looks very pretty and is what you expect to see in a private conservatory, and, to my surprise, when I walked into our modest show house 100x20, my hard-working son had just done what I had been condemning. But I say again, it is not as good as to have your Easter stuff in blocks. It is better handled, easier for the purchaser to make a choice and more business-like all around, and I am sure will save you time and work. And this show ought to be made at least a week ahead of time. People will be calling in to order, and if you have a good blaze of color it is a better adv. than all the talk or explanation you can give them. A very prosperous M. D. in our neighborhood gave me the good advice in this homely way: "Wash all you have got and hang out all your wash," and it's good advice in this age of show and display.

Delivering.

A plan which we have followed for several years, which excuse me repeating again to you, is to set aside a section of bench for your daily deliveries, that is, a place where all Thursday's deliveries should be put as soon as ordered or selected, and the same for Friday's, Saturday's and Sunday's. It will save any amount of confusion and mistakes, and while you are clearing off Friday's and delivering them as fast as you can you won't have Saturday's lot on the brain—"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

There is a wide range of character in those engaged in our business as everybody knows. Some are interested in selling and can be heard to say, "Oh, don't worry about the delivery; let's sell first." Perhaps that's the smartest business man, but I always feel that at Christmas and Easter there is little need of anxiety about the sale, and am far more exercised about the delivery. I don't pretend to be the slightest bit more conscientious than the average florist, but bad, careless and belated deliveries worry me, and, depend upon it every time there is a real cause for complaint it hurts. Let us hope for a good week's weather and all will be well.

A SIMPLE WREATH.

I send you photograph of a little loose wreath of our own designing, to show especially how ribbon may be used otherwise than simply as a tie. There are opportunities many times when using delicate flowers, for a full or partial ribbon effect as shown in the picture.

This contribution is made in response to a call for sample wreaths that appeared in the Review some time ago.

CARNATIONS AT JOLIET.

In the course of a year many people visit this Illinois city much against their will, but I was one of a party of twenty who went to Joliet entirely of our own free wills, and we are jolly yet.

A mile or so nearer Chicago is the establishment of the Chicago Carnation Co., managed most ably by that intelligent man and enthusiast, James Hartsherne. Here is an establishment that is exclusively carnations from beginning to end and nothing else. With the exception of the last new iron house, some 30x300 feet, the houses are not of the most modern construction, all attached, with few partitions, massive posts and high wooden gutters. I only mention the construction to note that the uniformly grand condition of the carnations is not due to perfection of houses.

There are twelve large houses and it is impossible to find a weak spot on the whole of the benches. Every variety worth growing will be found here and if not grown for flowers they are grown for the cuttings. It would be idle to speak of the health, vigor or productiveness of any of the well known varieties, for in my humble opinion they are about as well known as it is possible they can be.

I have had my faith somewhat shaken in the "Model" support this winter, mostly by the remarks of people who I supposed knew more about such things than I do, and we are most willing to grant that to anybody, but here you see only the "Model" used and nothing can answer the purpose better. If you can stand the price they are a most perfect method and a bed of Marquis at home with its third ring on now has taken the kink out of my wavering opinion and the Model is good enough for me.

Mr. Hartshorne can show you Lawson, The Marquis, Lord, Bradt, White Cloud, Norway, Joost, Roosevelt and several others in grand shape. Norway was particularly fine, loaded with its fine flowers, and although he did not praise Lawson he gracefully admitted that it's in a class by itself and here as elsewhere it is simply incomparable.

Mr. Hartshorne, for the time he has been at Joliet, and the number of his seedlings, appears to have had phenomenal success and has raised more than his share of good ones. His benches of Mrs. Potter Palmer, the fine scarlet, are as fine flowers, healthy plants and with as great an abundance of bloom and buds as I ever saw on any variety. This must be a grand commercial scarlet. Its habit is perfection. Mrs. Higinbotham is also a beauty, with fine stem, and its Daybreak shade will make it a sure favorite. The sincerest flattery I can give these two varieties is to say that I bought of them both.

Mr. H. has several of his seedlings that are largely grown for flowers and most profitably, and although many growers would be proud to have such crops, he did not think they were of a class good enough to send out. Chicot is a most profitable variety of the Armazindy type; his white seedling No. 101 is a good one; Nydia, a most free pink striped and a red seedling, all of which he says return him as much money as the well known widely grown varieties. By the by, he is going to stick to Prosperity with every hope that he can grow it profitably, and no doubt it will be done well, and with good returns in many places next year. "Bon Homme" seems to be one of the most prolific whites on the place.

And now we come to what was most interesting of all. Some magnificent beds of varieties that will be sent out next year. I think in the newly named "Her Majesty" that we will find a superb white, a perfect stem, large well formed flower and as we saw it, nothing but flowers and buds. As seen there you feel that in a white carnation there is nothing more to be desired. Harlowarden is of the Roosevelt shade but richer and a good deal larger, an immense flower. As fascinating a bench as there is on the place is a thousand plants of Marshall Field. It matters not how grandly you can grow the good old Bradt this beautiful striped variety must supersede it. I have never seen Gaiety growing and don't want to make a comparison, but this M. F. is certainly a wonder. It holds its flowers up like a Lawson. It is beautifully marked and there are so many of them it will make carnations cheap.

Now I have spoken in perhaps high, strong terms of all I have seen there, but not a jot more than I honestly believe is deserving, and if you think I have overdone it just go to Joliet and judge for yourself and you will say, "He is ever truthful."

Here also is another fine propagating house filled with as stout and healthy a lot of cuttings as can be seen. Only a capacious pocket could build such sheds and offices as are attached. The furnace cellar to the last big house would do for a wine cellar for King Edward VII, and the room above, if partitioned off, would do for the harem of the sultan or the king of Timbuctoo. There is every facility for doing a methodical business and the facilities are grasped.

Hospitality was there in abundance, and then a pair of high steppers and a lofty break conveyed us to the station at Joliet. The $3,000 team went through the mud so fast that a very expensive overcoat, the only good piece of clothing I do own, was covered thick with the yellow mud of what in the summer months is doubtless a beautiful road. We never caught a glimpse of the big penitentiary, but we saw a Chicago alderman, so we were satisfied, and we were considerably wiser and better for our visit to the energetic Mr. Hartshorne.

NEW BEGONIAS.

We present in this issue engravings from photographs of two new begonias raised by V. Lemoine & Sons, Nancy, France. The great commercial value of the Gloire de Lorraine, originated and sent out by this firm, naturally excites considerable interest in their further introductions. Should either of these two new ones equal Gloire de Lorraine in value to American florists they will certainly be very welcome.

THE NATIONAL CARNATION EXHIBITION.

By A. F. J. Baur.

[Read before the Society of Indiana Florists at Indianapolis, March 4.]

Mr. President and Gentlemen: I was asked to read a paper this evening on the carnation exhibition held last month in connection with the annual meeting of the American Carnation Society. That would not be a very difficult task if it were not for the fact that every member here saw the show and there was little if anything there that you could not see just as well as I. Naturally you decided for yourself which were the most promising varieties, and so I will not say anything about that part of the show. But perhaps you did not look at it all from the same standpoint that I did, and perhaps you did not have the same thoughts that passed through my mind. So I will give you a few impressions that came to me during the convention and since then.

While I was walking around the hall, looking at vase after vase full of grand blooms of the leading newer varieties, I noticed here and there a bunch of some old-time favorite, and my thoughts were led to a comparison of the varieties we are growing to-day with those of ten years ago. That was about the time Wm. Scott came out and among the leaders were Daybreak, McGowan, Silver Spray, Portia, Garfield, Hector, Grace Wilder and Tidal Wave. Where would they be alongside Mrs. Lawson, Prosperity, Marquis, Lorna, Norway, Crane, America, Estelle, Crocker and many other varieties we have to-day, to say nothing of what we are to have inside of a year or two? Not only have these varieties nearly all gone practically out of cultivation, but many others have come and gone since to make room for better varieties that were offered from time to time.

It is something wonderful when one stops to think of it, this great improvement in the carnation. When we look at a bunch of those fine large blooms we are apt to think as most people do, that the greatest improvement has been made in the size of the bloom. But do you know that there has been less added to the size of the bloom than there has to one or two other qualities? We had blooms three and one-half inches in diameter and more, ten years ago, and that is considered a very fair-sized bloom to-day. But get out your old trade papers and look up the photographs of the first few exhibitions and notice how the blooms hung over the side of the jars and nearly touched the table, and then look how our blooms to-day are supported two feet above the vases. I think that the greatest improvement has been made in the stem.

Naturally with the numerous seedlings came great improvements and great variety of color. There is much room for improvement in that line yet, although there seem to be a few ideal colored varieties in sight now. We need a scarlet like Adonis badly and we need a good, pure pink that does not fade or turn blue. The calyx is also a part that needs improving. We have a few varieties that it is just about impossible to make burst, but oh, how many of our best varieties are inclined to burst a large percent. of their calyxes. Think of what a gem Mr. Witterstaetter would have in his Enquirer if it only had a calyx like old Albertini! But I believe we are working out that point, too, as we do not think of keeping a seedling that is inclined to burst its calyx.

Would it pay us to grow such blooms for the market? That is a question we must decide each for himself after studying his market carefully. It certainly ought to pay every retailer to have on hand at least a few of these fine blooms, even if his trade calls for a medium grade of stock. Many a person who visited the show last month will ask you why they are unable to buy such fine blooms at the stores or greenhouses, and you should be able to offer them the same high-grade blooms, providing they are willing to pay a fair price for them. You can educate your customers up to a high plane if you go about it right.

I am sure it pays us wholesalers to grow just as fine a bloom as we can, providing we do not sacrifice too much in the way of quantity. It is a well-known fact that in all lines of stock the best grades are always disposed of first, and if there is anything left over it is invariably the lower grade. The high grade will always find a buyer at some price, even if it be only the cost of production, while the lower grades, if the market be glutted, are a total loss. No grower ever got rich or famous by producing a low grade of stock, but it is always the grower of the highest grades that has more customers than he can supply, and if there is any money made, he is the one who makes it.

But with all this striving after quality we must not forget that necessary adjunct, quantity. You can greatly increase the quality of your blooms by robbing the plants of about one-half of the blooming shoots, but that would not pay you, as there would be too few blooms, even if you received a good price for them, and in the same way you must not plant varieties that produce only a few extra fine blooms, but rather try to get a high grade of blooms from a prolific variety by giving your plants high-grade culture.

We find that in order to keep up with the times we must test a good many of the new varieties as they are introduced. If we have reason to think that a variety is going to become a popular favorite we purchase enough stock to give us a good start, but if we are doubtful about a variety we go a little slower and try only enough plants to test it with. Of course we buy a good many varieties and grow them only one season, as they do not come up to the standard under our culture, but we never fail to get at least one or two varieties each season that are decided acquisitions, and if we get only one good one out of a dozen we are not discouraged. The fault is more often our own rather than the fault of the variety. It pays to get a few plants the first season, as you can then work up a stock at much smaller expense than if you wait a year or two and find the variety in great demand, and you have the advantage of

There is no denying the fact that these exhibitions are a great benefit to the trade. The sight of something beautiful invariably excites a desire to possess, and I am sure that many a visitor to that exhibition bought his or her first bunch of flowers. After having enjoyed these first ones they are very likely to want more of them from time to time, and before very long you will have them among your regular customers. It is our duty, not only to ourselves from a business standpoint, but to the people from a moral standpoint, to foster and cultivate this love for flowers among the people. It tends to make better men and better women. Whenever you see a dooryard full of flowers or a window filled with plants in the winter, you may feel quite certain that a happy family lives among them. Flowers are not wanted in a home where there is discord and strife.

The carnation has always been the people's flower. Away back as far as our oldest members can think our mothers and grandmothers loved the old-fashioned pinks. But it was considered a common flower then, and we are indebted to the American Carnation Society for the high standing the carnation now enjoys, and I am sure these exhibitions have helped as much as any one thing to make the carnation popular. The exhibition last month was a grand success, we all know, and we may well be proud of the fact that the greatest carnation show ever held in the world was held here in our city and our state. And another thing we may feel proud of is that out of about thirty standard varieties shown there, at least one-third of them were produced in this state. Indiana may well be proud of her part in bringing the carnation to the front.

There is, however, one thing in connection with the exhibition which I deeply deplore. During the entire blooming season we are exceedingly careful to preserve the natural fragrance of our blooms. When a new variety is scored the fragrance counts five points. And yet when we come together with our choicest blooms to show the people what we have accomplished, we subject them to that worst of all fragrance destroyers, tobacco smoke. I am sure that at least half of the men who were unpacking the blooms and arranging them in the vases were smoking cigars and filling the air and the blooms with the fumes. Not only in the unpacking room, but in the exhibition hall as well, during both days there was smoking going on continually. I heard several people remark that the large blooms seem to have less fragrance than the smaller ones they usually buy and wonder whether the high culture did not tend to destroy the fragrance. There ought to be a rule, and it should be strictly enforced at all exhibitions, forbidding smoking in or about the exhibition hall.

SPRING GLEANINGS.

Only a few more days and the Easter trade of the year 1902 with all its trials will be a matter of history, and the only anxiety remaining will be that of collecting the bills, and this of itself will be quite a sufficient anxiety for many a grower and dealer. A good trade at that important season is much to be desired by the growers too, for this winter has been quite a trying one in many respects, and for the past six weeks or so the coal piles have melted away like snow in a spring thaw.

Such a season is an expensive and rather discouraging one to many growers, for there has, in the vicinity of Philadelphia at least, been very little assistance from the sun, a total of three perfectly clear days during the month of February having been reported by the weather office, and ten wet days, with the remainder more or less cloudy. Such conditions are difficult to counteract by artificial means, and in consequence the grower who has not got a thoroughly efficient heating apparatus is very liable to fall short in the race against time with a lot of flowering stock, and even with houses that are well heated the plants are not likely to be as sturdy and well finished as though they had had the benefit of plenty of sunshine. Immense stocks are in preparation, however, and in some lines there may prove to be quite enough for the market.

Some dwarf Japanese cherries, forced into bloom, are among the novelties, and when well flowered will probably prove attractive to the public, the oddly twisted branches of these contorted plants giving them a decidedly Japanese effect, and as this quickwitted nation has given much attention to cherry blossoms and variations of the same, it is quite probable that some unusual varieties may develop among these imported plants.

Very handsome rhododendrons are being shown, most of the plants being of good shape and well set with buds, but with these as with Azalea indica, the wise grower makes a careful selection of varieties, for all rhododendrons do not force equally well, nor are all colors equally popular, and the same rule applies to azaleas. The latter also seems to average fairly good this season, and there will doubtless be a sufficient supply for Easter, for it does not take very hard forcing to bring these plants in safely at that season.

A little judicious tying of the stray shoots of the azaleas before the buds are advanced so much as to be in danger of bruising will often make a saleable plant out of an awkward shaped one, but this tying should be neatly done with green twine, the ties being drawn down to the main stem of the plant so that the use of stakes may be avoided, the object of the tying being to either draw in unruly shoots or to open out the heads of the plant in order that the flowers may not appear too crowded.

The acacias are among the most graceful of yellow flowered plants for this season, and probably not more than four or five species are commonly seen, the best of these being A. armata, A. dealbata, A. Drummondii and A. Riceana. The latter name, by the way, is not commemorative of a certain well known member of the florists' supply trade, probably because he is not "a dead one," as commemorative names are more often taken from some of the dear departed, in like manner to the custom of our government in decorating its currency with the portraits of deceased notables.

But to return to acacias, armata is the one with ovate, entire, dark green leaves, with rather long thorns at the base of the leaves, and usually produces its ball-like flowers singly in the axils of the leaves, and is one of the best for general purposes. A. dealbata is very distinct from the former, and has bi-pinnate leaves that are whitish beneath, while the flowers are produced in short racemes and in great quantity. A Drummondii is also a distinct one, having pinnate leaves consisting of two pairs of pinnæ of dark green color, and also produces a number of flowers together on a spike. A. Riceana has almost a weeping habit unless the plants are cut in frequently, the foliage somewhat spare and the pale yellow flowers in long spikes.

In case any of the acacias are kept over from year to year rather than to be sold off clean each season, it is best to cut them back severely after the blooming season is over, and as soon as they start into growth to repot or give them a good top dressing, and during the summer months they should be kept outdoors in order to ripen the growth well before the season for their flowers arrives.

The taste for large semi-tropical effects in outdoor bedding is certainly growing and growing quite rapidly too, the fine examples of this class of work that were shown at the Pan-American Exposition having doubtless given renewed impetus to this idea, and with this in view it is a good plan to make early preparation for this class of business.

The cannas will of course continue to take the most prominent place in such plans of outdoor decoration, but there are several other plants that should also be taken into consideration, among these being a few bananas to be used in locations where they will not be too much exposed to the wind, and the best species to use for this purpose are Musa ensete (the Abyssinian banana), M. superba, and M. Cavendishii. The young plants of these musas grow on quite rapidly provided they are given sufficient root room and plenty of nourishment, this being combined with a moist atmosphere and a temperature of 68 to 70 degrees.

It is getting rather late to sow seeds of M. ensete, but still with plenty of heat at command they might produce useful plants for late work, and it is mostly late work when the musas are concerned, for they start along much better when not planted outdoors before June 1st to 10th. The seeds of this musa are very hard and are benefitted by being soaked for about 18 hours in warm water before being sown.

Speaking of musas brings to mind the fact that a new species has been recently reported under the name of M. oleracea, a species that has the unusual characteristic for this genus of producing a large underground tuber, the tuber containing a large proportion of starch and being edible when baked or boiled. M. oleracea is found in some of the South Sea Islands and is an article of food among the natives of New Guinea.

Humea elegans used to be grown in tropical bedding in the Eastern United States a quarter of a century ago, but yet does not seem to have become common. While young this plant resembles a seedling tobacco plant to some extent, but throws up a much branched and feathery looking inflorescence that is pinkish in color.

The young plants of the humea are raised from seeds which are preferably sown in the fall as soon as they are ripe, the seedlings being shifted on from time to time to prevent the loss of the lower leaves from starting at the root. A moderate temperature is all that is required to keep this plant in health, for example a night temperature of 55 degrees.

It may also be in order at this time to jog one's memory with the fact that many retail dealers find themselves short of vines for various purposes at the bedding season, and that roses of the Wichuraiana class are among the very best to use in the cemetery for covering over graves, and also to hide an unsightly wall or fence.

But from English ivies to moonflowers, and from ampelopsis to the Dutchman's pipe, and a host of others in between, may all be called for by the customers of the retail florist, and it is well to take time by the forelock and prepare the stock.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

By Charles H. Totty.

[Read before the Monmouth County (N. J.) Horticultural Society, March 7.]

I propose to-night to speak more particularly on the chrysanthemum from an exhibition standpoint, so that while the different types are all interesting, we will only give them a passing mention. It is generally accepted by botanists to-day that all the types, as Japanese, Incurved, Pompon, Anemone, and so on are simply evolutions of the small single yellow Chrysanthemum indicum, which is the original wild type or species. It is a striking instance of what man has accomplished in less than fifty years by intelligent care and cultivation. If the next half century shows a similar ratio of development, great indeed will be the mum of the future. May we all live to see it.

Unquestionably the great public are mainly interested in the wonderful flowers that are staged annually at the shows throughout the country, and the method of culture to produce these exhibition flowers, which I will now describe, is the one we have followed with very successful results, as those of you who know our record are aware.

We never save any old stools for stock plants, but as soon as the flowering period is past we go over the benches and select as many as we need of the strongest and best suckers. These are rooted immediately, and are afterwards put out into flats, and kept in a cool house. It is from these young plants that we get our cuttings in the early spring. It has been argued against this system that the plants are never rested, and deterioration must rapidly set in. This is a fallacy, because many varieties have improved in constitution with us from year to year, Golden Wedding being a notable case in point. The cuttings from the young stock always seem to us to root more readily and come away stronger than cuttings from old stools.

March is the month during which we propagate the most of our stock for bench culture. After propagating (which is such an easy and well known operation that I need not describe it), the young stock is got out into cold frames as soon as the weather will permit. This is for the purpose of inducing the young plants to make a short jointed, thrifty growth; for, gentleman, a good start is the most important item to future success.

We plant out on the benches from the 1st to the 20th of May, according to the condition of the stock. Growers with a limited head room could not afford to do this, but as our house is twenty feet high at the ridge, the question of head room causes us no concern. Some of you may regard it as unnecessary to plant so early, but we cannot get as large or well finished flowers from later rooted stock.

The soil we use is the usual rotted sod and manure, with a good dash of bone meal through it. We plant at a distance of ten inches each way for single stem plants, and would not recommend any closer planting if the very finest flowers are looked for. After planting the bed is made solid by walking between the rows, and pounding immediately round the plants with a half brick. We regard the firming of the soil as an important item, because if the soil is left very loose, the roots will run rapidly all through it, and the plants will make a very rapid, soft, long jointed growth, a thing above all others to be avoided.

After planting watering is carefully looked after, until the plants are growing vigorously, when of course large quantities must be supplied. As soon as possible after planting, every endeavor should be made to completely get rid of all the black and green aphis, and if this is done thoroughly, the plants will, with the kindly aid of a few lady bugs, keep perfectly clean all summer. For supports we use wire stakes, four to six feet high, according to variety. These stakes are kept in place by being tied to wires running lengthways of the house some three feet above the rows.

We commence feeding with liquid fertilizers, generally early in August, and while of course always using weak solutions, we never give the plants clean water again. Feeding is very important, but as every grower knows, no man can lay down hard and fast rules concerning it. The condition of the plants themselves is the only true index as to when or how long to feed. If the plants are short jointed, and the wood solid and well ripened, they will take with beneficial results much more feeding than plants that have been grown very rapidly, and are long jointed, sappy and immature. About the best thing I can think of to enable the beginner to determine whether his plants are getting all the food they want is to watch the foliage very carefully. If the leaves are of good size, and a blackish green, and brittle to the touch, it may generally be assumed that the limit of feeding is reached. It is far better to err on the weak side than to overdose the plants. In addition to the liquid made from natural manures, nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia may be used in the proportions of one pound to fifty gallons of water. The soda should not be used after the bud is as large as a marble, or the flower will be too soft to travel without injury.

Bud selection is an important problem to the uninitiated. We take the crown bud on practically everything except the pink varieties, which will, generally speaking, come a better color on a later bud. Colonel Appleton and Golden Wedding are varieties that should not be taken before September, but for all the general varieties we take the first bud that appears after the 20th of August. It is useless for a grower who proposes to exhibit his flowers, to take only terminal buds and expect to compete with men handling crowns. While the terminal bud makes sometimes neater, better formed flowers, they are invariably much smaller, and in the case of some sorts like the Carnot varieties, the terminal bud is absolutely worthless. It is a mistake to use the crown bud when the plants are growing very closely together, because then they generally run up a long, thin neck, which is unable to support the flower, but this trouble will not occur when plants have been properly handled and grown sufficiently far apart.

When the buds begin to show color, feeding should be altogether discontinued, and a drier atmosphere maintained. Always leave a crack of air on the top of the house to prevent the moisture condensing on the petals, as this causes the flower to damp. Less and less water will be needed at the roots as the flower develops, and a night temperature of 45 to 50 degrees will be found to give the best results.

Flowers should always be placed in water for from twelve to thirty-six hours, according to the distance they are to be shipped, always being careful to see that the stems are upright, so as to allow an uninterrupted upward movement of the water to the flower. Always arrange things so that you have lots of time to set up your flowers when you get to the exhibition hall. If the other fellow gets first, don't get mad but take him out for a liquid appetizer and ask him how he did it. A man has to be a good deal of a philosopher to be a mum exhibitor sometimes.

But we will return to our growing. Classes for plants in 6-inch pots appear in most schedules, and for these the plants are rooted in May or early June. Owing to the fact that the weather is so warm at that period, these young plants need a good deal of attention until they get potted up into the flowering pots. Dwarf, sturdy varieties only should be used for this work, and never let the plants get dry. A perfect plant should have foliage clear down to the pot.

Specimen plants are a magnificent feature of a show when well grown. They represent an immense amount of labor and care. Cuttings for this work can be rooted from December onwards. They must be kept continually on the move. When the young plants are about eight inches high they should be topped, and this pinching must continue until the end of July. About that time the plants should have their last potting, and after the pots are full of roots feeding with liquid fertilizers must be religiously attended to. Specimen plants, owing to their restricted root area, require much more feeding than plants in benches, and when one considers the enormous top they carry, the need of adequate nourishment is apparent. Training the plants into shape must be attended to in good season, and a wire frame will be found much neater than a forest of stakes.

Insects and Diseases.

There are several leaf diseases due almost invariably to a heavy soil, and an over supply of water. The rust is also first in evidence on plants that are kept too wet. We have been successful in keeping down all these diseases by the use of sulphide of potassium, used in the proportion of one ounce to two gallons of water. It is always well to use this mixture once a week in the spring as a preventive measure. Black and green fly can be easily kept in check by tobacco in some form. Caterpillars are a bad pest some seasons, and as with the grasshoppers, hand-picking seems the only efficient remedy. Thrips and red spiders are more or less troublesome, but can be kept down by a judicious use of the hose.

The man who first said "Eternal vigilance is the price of a good chrysanthemum" hit the mark exactly. If a little aphis appears on the plants don't think, "Well, it isn't much, I won't bother with it," for a day or two. Get rid of it right away. Just as soon as a plant has filled its pot with roots, move it into a larger one. If you happen to notice that a batch of plants are dry, don't leave them for an hour or so. Get your hose and water them at once. Attention to just these little details is often the only difference between the successful and the unsuccessful.

I cannot impress it too strongly on the novice that a chrysanthemum should never get a check of any kind from the day it is put into the cutting bench until the flower is cut. Get the young plants out of the sand when the roots are about half an inch long. Then they will not get drawn and spindly. Plant out your young stock before it gets pot-bound, then you will not be troubled with the plants throwing buds when they ought to be making good healthy shoots. In short, get to know your plants as a mother knows her babe. Then you will never need to worry about a successful outcome of your labors.

The following are what I regard as the best varieties to grow for exhibition:

White.—Robinson, Weeks, Merza, Mme. Carnot, Eaton, Mutual Friend and Mme. Deis.

Yellow.—Appleton, Hurrell, Wedding, Goldmine, Warren, Mrs. Mease, Falconer.

Pink.—Morel, Mrs. Coombs, A. J. Balfour, Mrs. Barkley, Bloodgood.

Any other color.—Broomhead, Nellie Pockett, Lady Anglesey, Chenon de Leche, Mrs. T. Carrington and Australia.

In conclusion, if you are desirous of placing the chrysanthemum where it belongs, join the Chrysanthemum Society of America and remember that all true chrysanthemum worshipers go to heaven when they die.

A HARDY BORDER.

Please tell me what to use and how to plant a border seven feet wide and one hundred and forty feet long. I have an order to plant it with hardy shrubs and hardy herbaceous perennials. It must contain subjects that will supply bloom from April to November, and look neat in foliage when not in bloom. Please tell me distance apart to plant.

Does not Ampelopsis Veitchii need protection in winter here, where the thermometer sometimes goes to 20 degrees below zero? J. J. L.

Mass.

Your correspondent is not sufficiently explicit to advise properly how a border seven feet wide and one hundred and forty feet long ought to be planted with shrubbery and herbaceous plants, to give effect from April to November. The relation of the border to its surroundings should be given; however, the following list of shrubs and herbaceous plants can be recommended:

Shrubs—Andromeda arborea, Berberis Thunbergii, Berberis vulgaris, Benzoin benzoin, Cornus paniculata, Cornus florida, Cornus alba, Cydonia japonica, Hydrangea paniculata, Ligustrum ibota, Lonicera Ruprechtiana, Lonicera Morrowii, Lonicera tartarica, Photina villosa, Phila-delphus grandiflora, Philadelphus coronaria, Rhodotypus Kerrioides, Rosa setigera, Rosa nitida, Rosa multiflora, Ligustrum persicum, Viburnum lentago, Viburnum molle, Viburnum opulus, Viburnum tomentosa, Viburnum dentatum, Viburnum lantana, Viburnum prunifolium.

Herbaceous plants—Aster nova-anglia, Aster nova-anglia rosea, Boltonia asteroides, Boltonia latisquamæ, Cassia marylandica, Coreopsis grandiflora, Doronicum plantigineum excelsum, Enlalia japonica, Funkia grandiflora, Funkia lanceolata, Helenium autumnale, Helianthus laetiflorus, Helianthus molis, Helianthus orgyalis, Heliopsis laevis, Hemerocallis aurantiacum major, Iris germanica, Iris Kæmpferii, Liatris scariosa, Liatris pycnostachya, Paonia herbacia in variety, Phlox decnssata in variety, Pyrethrum uliginosum, Solidago canadensis, Solidago rigida.

Shrubs may be planted three or four feet apart, according to size, and thinned out as growth progresses, for transplanting elsewhere. In a few years, most of the above enumerated shrubs, with proper care, will each have covered a space of seven feet in diameter.

The herbaceous plants may be planted two feet apart. It is important, however, that crowding should be avoided; and it should be borne in mind that herbaceous plants are the better for being lifted every two or three years and separated, replanting after thorough digging and fertilizing of the border.

ROSES FOR CUT FLOWERS.

By F. J. Fillmore.

[Read before the St. Louis Florists' Club, March 13.]

Mr. President and Fellow-Members: As I have been called upon to read an essay upon the growing of roses for cut flowers, I have prepared this one to the best of my ability, as I am not a born essayist. As most of you are aware, I read one last year, and must therefore retrace my steps, but one lives and learns in this, our profession of growing plants and flowers.

To proceed: First comes propagation. Having previously prepared the propagating bed by seeing that boards are good and sound and applying a heavy coat of hot whitewash and putting on about four inches of clean, coarse river sand, which after being well pressed down will be about three inches deep, we are ready for the cuttings. To digress for a few moments—it seems to me that the fungus of the propagating bed seems to be a bugbear to some, because why? Cleanliness and fresh air is not attended to. I always have the sand washed and this sand serves for the entire season, as no foreign material is allowed on it. Every dead leaf or cutting is removed after each crop and the sand is allowed to sweeten by lying loose for a few days. Now, of course, this sand washing would be a large item of expense to a firm doing a large business, but when I read of some of them throwing out sand after every crop I do not think it would make so much difference, especially if some genius in this age of labor-saving devices would invent a sand washing machine. We never have fungus.

Cuttings are made of the best wood obtainable. While I have never tried it, I do not believe in using the weak, blind wood; if it is good and strong it will do, but I prefer wood that is about to bloom, or sometimes that which is already in bud. I generally leave the short stems on for that purpose when I know about what time I shall be ready for the cutting, which is made from one to two eyes and inserted in the sand in rows, about one inch between the cuttings and one inch deep, the rows being about two and one-half inches apart. The sand is well soaked before putting in the cuttings and they are thoroughly watered after they are put in, sprinkled most every day, and well watered every two or three days. My idea of the temperature is 65 degrees bottom heat and 55 degrees top, though I have rooted them successfully at a much lower temperature. Air is given to the house almost every day. I rooted them this season at one end of a carnation house where I have a coil under the bench. Newspapers are put over the cuttings part of the day. This keeps the direct air from striking them. They had no sunshine, as this corner is shaded by the dwelling house.

I think New Year's is about the best time to start. In about three to four weeks they will have formed roots, and I then put them into 2-inch pots, roots averaging one inch long. It is much better to pot them before they get any longer, as the roots are not so easily broken and it is a quicker job. The soil is three-quarters good loam and one-quarter well rotted hotbed manure, with about one-sixth sand added, run through a one-half inch sieve, potting gently but firmly. Be sure the soil is not cold or they will be checked. The young plants are then set on a good, light, sunny bench, thoroughly watered twice and treated precisely in the same manner as the cuttings until they begin to draw root, when they are fully exposed to the sun, and are never shaded from this time on. About the middle of March the strongest are repotted into 3-inch pots in the same kind of soil, run through a one-half inch screen; no sand is added after this. About the first of May, or sooner if ready, the strongest are repotted into 4-inch, as I am not able to plant until about June 10. I have never used any drainage in pots for roses.

After throwing out the old stock we now prepare the benches, wheeling out the old soil, then sweeping off all that remains on the bench and face boards, then we turn the boards over, which are always 6-inch, repairing where needed. This side of the board is also swept off and then a good hot coat of whitewash is applied. We put about a 3-inch pot of salt to each bucketful. All walls are also served the same way, and every particle of loose dirt or rubbish is removed from under the benches. This is done once in a while during the season. We scatter air-slacked lime under all parts of the benches, while we are painting, which is done every second year. Preparing soil, etc., the benches get a good airing and sun bath.

The soil is three-quarters good, stiff loam with one-quarter well-rotted hotbed manure added. We get as much sod as possible, but it is getting to be a very scarce article in our locality. The compost is then well mixed, chopping the sod up fine, a good sprinkling of air-slacked lime being added as the soil is mixed. We space the boards to one-half or three-quarters inch apart. Sod cut as thin as possible is then laid over the spaces, or straw will do if sod is not procurable. The soil is then wheeled right into the benches and spread almost up to the top of the face boards, which are about five and one-half inches above the bench boards. After being pressed down there will be about four inches of soil.

We are now ready for planting. Plants are well watered previous to this, and in case of a few being dry when turning them out I have a bucket of water beside me and dip them in it. I plant them about twelve inches apart each way; after planting a number according to the weather, I press or pound the soil firmly around the plant with a round piece of hard wood made to suit the hand, and leaving a little hollow around the plant. Do not level the soil at this stage. The plants are then watered two or three times until soil is damp all through. The surrounding soil is not watered at this stage. I syringe usually three times a day in very hot weather, watering when needed. In about two weeks the weeds are pulled out. Sometimes we loosen them with a small hoe. This kills a great many of them and makes it easier to weed. The soil is then leveled and thoroughly watered and kept so after this. I believe in keeping it moist, not wet, during the long days, and a little on the dry side, not dry, during the short days.

A mulch of one-half inch of well-rotted manure is now applied. This serves as a protection from the fierce rays of the sun and gives a more even moisture. About the first of October a mulch is applied again, this time of about two-thirds rotten manure and one-third soil. Flour of bone may be added to this if you wish, sprinkling on the surface or mixing with the mulch. We put on about the same depth as before. During the winter a generous sprinkling of lime is applied once or twice. If you should observe yellow foliage on the plants from clubroot or other causes, by doing this it will benefit them greatly, as I found out this winter on account of the fire that we had the roses got chilled by having the door open so long, thereby causing them to lose their leaves and many turning yellow. I believe in applying the lime this way rather than watering with lime-water as is generally recommended, as when in this condition they had better be kept on the dry side, and by syringing the lime is gradually absorbed into the soil. I think, from observation and some experience, that clubroot has been in my stock for the last couple of years, which I blame to poor soil, but by getting a good, vigorous growth on the plants and using lime liberally it can be kept in check. Later on in the season manure water is applied with the Kinney pump, which is invaluable to the small grower, weak at first and not very often, but as the days get longer we make it stronger and apply about every two weeks. We also mulch once more with manure.

Stake as soon as plants need it and keep them tied up through the season. Disbudding is strictly attended to by cutting shoots about half-way back and taking off all laterals throughout the season. A few short stems are left for the boys that want button holes and for design work. I also trim out blind wood occasionally. During the hot months the ventilators are kept wide open day and night, except in stormy or changeable weather. As fall approaches and the nights begin to get cool they are gradually lowered, and raised in the same way in the morning. Night temperature is 58 to 60 degrees; day, 65 to 67 degrees with steam heat; with sun heat and plenty of ventilation, 75 to 80 degrees. This part is, to my notion, one of the most important parts of rose growing; a very tiresome job in changeable weather, requiring attention sometimes every half-hour.

As soon as nights get chilly a little heat is applied with some air left on at night until steady firing starts. As soon as the first heat is turned on sulphur is put on the pipes. We simply mix it with water and put it on with an old paint brush and close up the house. This prevents or checks mildew which puts in appearance sometimes in spite of all precautions. This sulphuring is kept up throughout the season. Fumigation is started about the same time and kept up about every four or five days. I do this in the old-fashioned way and do not injure any blooms. Should the aphis appear it is better to fumigate lightly two or three nights in succession rather than very strong at once. Syringing is done in the morning on short days, every bright day directly under the foliage to keep down or check the red spider; on cloudy days just the warm ends near the main heating pipes. If a cold wind is prevailing when syringing it is better to lower the ventilators partly or entirely, and then gradually raise them again. On cloudy days when steam heat is scarcely needed it is a good plan to have a little, with a crack of air on.

It is pretty difficult to grow different varieties in one house, which I am compelled to do, and they would do much better could they have separate houses and be given the right notch. For instance, Perles would do better in 62 degrees or more, Brides and Maids about 58 to 60 degrees, and Woottons, 56 to 58 degrees. And, of course I am at a disadvantage in being in a crowded neighborhood, as it stands to reason with pure air and better soil I am sure I could produce far better stock. The blooms are cut from two to three times a day, according to the season, and are placed at once in cool water in cellar, and in warm weather placed in ice-box.

My main varieties are still the big four—the Bride, Bridesmaid, Perle des Jardins and Souvenir de Wootton. I also grow a few Golden Gate, also some Liberty, but I think this variety will not pay me, though I have an idea that I can grow it, but it would not pay to grow a small number. Brides take the lead; we know they do in more ways than one, and certainly we could hardly do without the Maid. Next comes the Perle, the best yellow rose to date. It would be grand could we have one to grow with the same treatment as Brides and Maids. The Wootton is a beautiful rose, ideal in form. If cut just as beginning to open it will last very well and is very fragrant. It is very popular with the young folks on account of its significant color.

I do not grow American Beauty, as my space is so limited, and our class of trade does not call for it much. I am going to try twenty-five Ivory this season. We cannot all grow extra grade stock, but I am sure by trying hard we can grow good flowers, and if every grower throughout the land would only do so there would be a great deal less of the periodical gluts, and although good blooms sell first, the poor ones affect the sale very seriously in time of gluts, and it is only by strict attention to every little detail and industry, that we can produce good flowers, and it is certainly a great pleasure and reflects credit on the grower when this is accomplished.

Just to bring the names of the more prominent roses to your notice I have added an appendix to this. I imagined that I had a dream and it was thus I was requested by the American Beauty to present the Souvenir de Wootton to her august majesty, Kaiserin Victoria, who was guarded by President Carnot, and here I observed the Bride accompanied by her Maid; observing the (pearl in the garden) Perle des Jardins, and having to pass through the Golden Gate I took the Liberty of making a call on the Queen of Edgely, where I also saw the American Belle nestled in a bed of Ivory, who was casting envious eyes at the two new claimants for popular favor, Helen Gould and Alice Roosevelt. If they prove as good as their namesakes they will certainly be a grand addition to the list of the queen of flowers. Hope I have not tired you with this essay by making it so long. I could write still more, but have endeavored to cover all points, and they are certainly facts from personal experience. I thank you all for your kind attention.

It was decided to hold the next annual exhibition and meeting in some other city than New York, the choice being left with the Executive Committee. It is likely that Chicago will be selected.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

For three weeks the retrograde movement in prices continued. Last week capped the climax—abundant supplies, light demand and spring weather tell the story. Not only was it the wholesale department that felt the strain, but the retail end of the industry has much cause for complaint. Hardly a ripple on society's sea last week. But the bargain hunter had his day. Everything in large lots was to be had for the asking. But beneath the surface of gloom may be detected the lurking smile of Easter hope. No use quoting last week's prices. They will be high enough in a week or so to even up matters. The only event of national importance during the week was the meeting of the National Rose Society. It's important features are referred to elsewhere.

Items.

"Johnny" Wier, of Brooklyn, lost one of his oldest employes last week, H. C. Von Chossig, whose death from pneumonia occurred on March 6th. Sickness has been general in the trade. Beaulieu, of Woodhaven, C. Schenck, of Traendly & Schenck, and Rudolph Asmus, of New Durham, being among the most seriously affected.

Samuel Parsons, Jr., has been appointed landscape architect by the New York park board, John DeWolf having resigned.

W. A. Manda's address on "Herbaceous Plants," at the last meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was an able paper and was much appreciated by visiting florists.

Dunne & Co., whose advertisement in this issue indicates the progressiveness of this house, have built up a large business in the last three years, as a horticultural supply depot. Mr. Dunne thinks his preparation "Dunnite" a sure cure for blackspot on roses, and he has also secured the sole agency for Thompson & Sons of New Brunswick, the largest manufacturers of special fertilizers in that country.

The supply houses, the green goods men and especially the fancy Easter basket manufacturers, report a tremendous demand for novelties. The florists' windows already give evidence of this, and all the retailers are profuse in their supplies for the anticipated demand.

One of the boys from the country, who had come to the rose show, "waited over" to see for himself how to draw a crowd in his own town. This is what he saw on cosmopolitan Broadway.

At Fleishman's the inevitable straw hat. The windows were neglected somewhat, nothing striking in them but magnificent azaleas, but just within was great activity. Enormous standing wreaths of lilacs with base of calla lilies and sago palm leaves; one of Bridesmaid roses nearly seven feet high; a pall of lily of the valley, and numerous smaller designs indicated the death of a prominent New Yorker.

Small's was a green window, premonition of St. Patrick's Day. The harp of Erin was a work of art. The green curtain in the background with its green electric lights added to the beauty of the picture. The harp was made of leucothoe leaves. Lycopodium moss completed the effect.

Thorley's is always interesting and sometimes novel. This happened to be one of the "novel" nights. Two tiny automobiles in basket work were the only moving things in the great center window, except the specimen white Angora cats therein, and the ladies were more enraptured by the feline beauties than by the grand blooming azaleas which filled the side windows of this noted establishment.

Warrendorff's, at 1193 Broadway, was a "spring window." Birdnest baskets, full of spring flowers, an auto of violets, handsome baskets, flowering plants and abundant mirror effects made this window very interesting. In the fall Mr. Warrendorff will probably have the finest store in the metropolis in the new Stokes apartment house on 74th street and the boulevard.

Right across the road from Warrendorff's is McIntosh, one of the rising young florists, who in a few years has built up an apparently safe business on this fickle thoroughfare. In his window shamrocks, in pots to match, spoke of the coming Monday. Fine Ramblers, lilies, azaleas and hydrangeas with fancy baskets innumerable.

J. W. Scallen's store was a blaze of color in Ramblers, tulips and azaleas. Here, too, of course, shamrocks were much in evidence.

The growers of flowering plants report almost everything of real value engaged. A good deal goes out of the city.

During the week there was a large number of visitors who came to view the rose show.

Bowling.

The bowlers celebrated St. Patrick's Day by rolling the following scores:

I am well pleased with the Florists' Review and wish you a prosperous year. —Wm. Hill, Toronto, Can.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

Lent does not seem to make very much difference in the florist business here; of course there are not as many parties and receptions, but flowers move off very readily considering the quantity. There has been a great deal of funeral work here lately, some funerals requiring a great many pieces, notably, that of our city treasurer, for which I believe almost every florist had some work; and the funeral of another prominent citizen in the East End required a great many flowers. There has been no cause for complaint and there will be none now, as everyone is looking forward to Easter, and are forcing some things and holding others in check. Prices range about the same as at last writing, namely: Roses, from $2 to $6; carnations, $1.25 to $3; violets, 40 to 60 cents per 100, and bulb stuff whatever you can get, some selling tulips as low as $1 per 100. These are about the only flowers which seem to be a drug.

Some More Crape Chasing.

There has been a new standard established here by some of the florists, but instead of raising the standard, it has been lowered. Some of the "enterprising" ones among the craft go to the undertakers and agree to furnish a door wreath (selling price, $4) and a load of palms (about fifteen) for decorating with, for all their funerals, if the undertaker will endeavor to get the cut flower work for them. Now is this a fair deal? Can a firm that is willing and wants to do the fair thing compete with such as these? Is there so much profit in funeral work that these firms can do this and also furnish floral pieces up to the standard? Now for one, I do not believe it can be done. They must certainly do inferior work or they cannot last long and pay their bills. I know of two firms here east of Wilson avenue, well known as crape chasers, that have taken their palms and door wreath way over on the West Side and received nothing for their labor; or possibly a dollar as they charge some undertakers $1 for the wreaths and let others have them free. It seems to be the idea of some to get the work anyhow and if the undertaker will not agree to work for them and pay $1, then these same firms will furnish the wreaths and palms for nothing.

Hustling for Easter.

A visit last week to several establishments revealed all hustling for Easter. J. Eadie's place was in prime condition; his carnations will be right, and calla lilies he will have galore, and such flowers! All grown in 7 and 8-inch pots placed on the bench close together. They show for themselves that they have made a record and are not yet going back. Some roses are grown at this place. They can get the plants all right, nice and healthy in the fall, but as soon as the dark days come on they seem to lose their vigor. I think Jim will have to move, as he is just in line with about a dozen factories that are continually belching forth dense clouds of black smoke, which rise just high enough to fall on Jim's glass and leave a thick coating of grease and dirt, which has to be washed off several times through the winter or he would have no light at all.

J. Wilsons' place is looking much better than it did; his carnations are just beginning to furnish flowers of the first quality. He will drop roses entirely next year and devote his glass to carnations, violets and adiantum. He has a very fine lot of adiantum from which he cuts a thousand a day.

A. Schmitt's place at Glenville was found to be in the usual good order; he has a fine lot of azaleas that will be all glory for Easter, and, I might say, all gold also. Here is also the home of the genista, daisy, cineraria, and also hydrangea, which he grows by the hundreds. He had just brought in his bulbs, which were looking fine and which had wintered well. Here are grown a great many tulips of the best varieties and they are always done well, Mr. Schmitt being a pioneer here in the forcing of bulbs. His carnations have done well considering the time they were housed, some as late as November 15th. Now here is something you must keep under your hat, for if you say anything to Charlie Schmitt about White Lawson, he will dilate on his by the hour, and he has good reason, too, for he has an almost pure white flower on what is otherwise a Lawson plant. The flower, which is almost a pure, waxy white, is identical with the Lawson except in color.

I also visited Fred Aul and found everything looking fine. He claims the Marquis carnation furnishes him more and better flowers than the Lawson, and he does have good success with it. He certainly has the finest lot of spring bedding stock I have seen anywhere; there were also some fine hyacinths in pots.

Now in regard to Easter stock, lilies and hydrangeas are going to be scarce and those who have them can have their own price. There will be plenty of hybrid roses, but well done Crimson Ramblers are going to be few and far between. There is always plenty of bulb stuff and the demand for this stock will depend on the weather. I think most of the growers will have plenty of carnations, although some will be off crop if we have a week or so of bright weather.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market is in fair shape, with supply rather in excess of demand. The tendency appears to be towards variety, anything new being readily marketed, provided, of course, it has merit. Indications point to a slight advance in prices for Easter. In the case of carnations, however, it is probable that prices will advance sharply; ordinary grade is expected to bring $3, choice stock $4, fancies $6 to $8.

St. Patrick's Day made its mark here this week. The shop windows were tastefully decorated for the occasion; green in all shades of foliage and ribbon predominated. There were also green carnations for the fakirs, bright for the casual customer and deep green for the loyal Irish. W. K. Harris had a whole house full of shamrocks in shamrock pans. They went well except in the case of the aforesaid loyal Irish, who returned a pan with the message that only the genuine shamrock was wanted. Nota bene, Mark Mills.

The untimely death of Mr. L. Elkins, Jr., created a heavy demand for funeral designs, affording opportunity for artistic skill. One retailer alone furnished forty tastefully executed designs, in choice flowers, including orchids, violets and lilies.

Easter Plants.

The fame of our plant growers has made this city a great floral mart, attended by visitors from far and near. There are more and better flowering and foliage plants here than ever before. Fully a dozen large growers have quantities of good stock well worth seeing. Space can only be devoted to a few of the features of this market.

Robert Scott & Son have Crimson Ramblers in various sizes that excell anything seen here in the past. They are perfectly shaped, literally covered with buds and clothed with foliage to the pot.

Wm. K. Harris has hydrangeas of a pleasing shade of blue rarely seen, specimen bougainvilleas and bleeding heart.

Jacob Becker has choice azaleas and pot roses. Robert Craig & Son have Jerusalem cherries, Ramblers and azaleas. Samuel J. Bunting has nicely finished lilies. Julius Koehler & Son some good hydrangeas and heliotrope.

Godfrey Aschmann has some Mme. Van der Cruyssen azaleas, that are fully 24 to 25 inches across and full of flowers, and a full line of Easter plants including a house full of cinerarias.

All these growers have a variety of other good stock, and nearly all the growers about this city will add something to the Easter offering.

Roses.

The demand for young American Beauty plants has been exceptionally good, quickened by the backing given by a capitalist to an eastern grower who proposes growing 75,000 plants of this variety. Will this result in over production?

Notes.

Samuel S. Pennock held his spring opening the first three days of this week. There were Easter plants from Harris, Graham, Craig & Son, Scott & Son, the Westcotts, W. A. Leonard, and J. B. Habermehl. Also decorative plants from Pennock Brothers, fancy ribbons, flowers and music.

The spring exhibition of the Penna. Horticultural Society was held this week. It will be reported later.

Joseph Heacock has experienced a good Easter demand for palms, indicating that the foliage plant business is increased by Easter, both in the small sizes sold outright and in the large sizes used for decorations.

Albert Woltemate has a nice lot of Vernon begonias among his large lot of Easter plants.

Rakestraw & Pyle are sending some nice Marquis carnations to Eugene Bernheimer.

Mrs. Plender, 26th and Girard Avenue, has sold out to Charles E. Meehan and John C. Graecy, who will continue the retail business under the name of the Plender Company.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons have grown all their own Easter stock, covering a full assortment of desirable plants.

Bowling.

It may be a mistake to chronicle unimportant games in the columns of a horticultural paper, such as occur when a visitor comes to town. The case is different when the scores concern the winning of a local Bowling League tournament in a city full of bowlers by the club that won our national convention tournament last summer. Know then, Mr. Scott, that our club defeated Pencoyd in the final games and won the championship. Here is the score:

Trade Conditions for March 10-15.

Signs of spring in the air, even to the extent of one solitary robin being heard from. The broad expanse of the common, as seen from the entrance to the flower market, is blushing green, probably in honor of the date of March 17. Unfortunately the shamrock cannot flourish in its soil.

Neither can the florist business flourish under spring conditions. But a huge amount of material was distributed by way of regular trade and the help of street traffic, so that I think the growers got fair returns from their glass acreage for the week even if prices did average low per hundred. The best of all kinds still commands a fair figure and sells out more completely than poorer grades. Violets seem the druggiest of all, especially double ones. All we need now for a few days is a supply of good customers.

Notes.

Indications point to a beginning of the end of Jas. Delay's business. At a meeting of creditors an assignee and a keeper were appointed and the place is advertised for sale.

In opposition to the proposed fumigating bill it was found necessary to appear in force at the state house in attendance upon a hearing given thereunto. This was done so thoroughly that the bill will be radically changed.

Jas. Sutherland, Jr., of Athol, brother of the Boston wholesaler, died at his home Friday of diabetes. He was a florist, catering largely to home trade, and comparatively a young man, being only about fifty-four years of age, but in declining health for two or three years.

Several of the bulb men have been badly poisoned by juices of their wares lately and this fact, coupled with a case of the grip, has laid W. W. Tailby on the shelf for a week or so, but he is getting along nicely.

Take a look at the huge glass in the window of the store formerly occupied by S. P. Calder. Dummy sash has been put on both inside and out to make it look like small panes, a la O. S. The oldest fashions are sometimes also the newest. And step into the next floral door beyond and look at MacMulkin's new catalogue of trees, shrubs, vines, seeds, etc. It is a beauty.

Jack roses are waking up. The very first I saw were in Elliott's box, some few days ago, in very limited quantities. Gee. Cartwright has them now in large quantity, and I presume others also.

The great strike did not affect many of us, but a few had to seek new ways of transport.

There is even more talk than usual about scarcity of lilies for Easter, and so many report having thrown away thousands even of their bulbs, that perhaps more truth will develop from the statements than is sometimes the fact.

ST. LOUIS.

Club Meeting.

The March meeting of the Florists' Club was slimly attended, only fourteen members being present. President Meinhardt opened the meeting at 3 o'clock with all the officers in their places. This should have been our annual rose meeting. Mr. J. F. Ammann brought a vase of very fine Brides and Maids, and A. S. Halstedt a vase of magnificent Marquis carnations and a vase of a white seedling which was much admired. This was all the exhibition consisted of. The question of holding a show this year came up again and was again tabled until next meeting of the club. The World's Fair matter also came up, and a special meeting will be called by the president some time before the next regular meeting in regard to the payment of our assessment.

Frank Fillmore read his essay on "Roses for Cut Flowers," which was very interesting to the members, and a vote of thanks was extended for his very able effort. Messrs. Steidle and Ammann were called upon to tell what they had seen and heard while at the carnation meeting at Indianapolis a few weeks ago. Both responded and wound up by saying that those Indiana fellows are great in everything they undertake.

John Fay Kennell's Gladiolus Seedling, No. 1900.

At the next meeting the question will be taken up as to how to bring the members out to the meetings. If they will only come and state what they want we will gladly give it to them, and do anything in our power to make it pleasant for them all. The next meeting will be held on Thursday, April 10, at 3 o'clock.

The Market.

Business was slow last week except in funeral work, which seems to be very plentiful at present, but as we are in the middle of Lent, not much could be expected from other sources. St. Patrick's Day brought an extra demand for flowers of all kinds—except yellow. Plenty of bouquets were used in the parade Sunday. At the wholesale market there seems to be almost anything one wants, and plenty of it, except white carnations. The demand for the latter was great, and not half enough came in to supply it.

In roses, Meteors, Brides and Maids had a good call and enough came in to supply demand at from $2 to $5 per 100, according to quality. Good, long Beauties are not any too plentiful, but shorts seem quite abundant.

Carnations are bringing $2 to $3 for good, fancy stock; a few colored ones sell below these prices. Colored ones are plentiful and white ones are scarce; quality very good, with extra long stems. Violets are down to 25 cents; supply equals demand; very little sale for doubles; Californias have the call. Bulb stock took a brace the past week and sold quite well, owing to the fact that quantities of this stuff are used in funeral work. Romans and paper whites are $2; valley, $2 and $3; daffs, $2 per 100. Harrisiis are more plentiful at from $10 to $12.50, and callas sell at $6 and $8. Tulips are not selling well at $1.50 and $2; a few fancy go at $3. The market was a little short on smilax last week, which sold well at $12.50.

Notes.

Mr. Carew Sanders and wife have returned from their trip to California. Mr. Sanders will tell the members at the next meeting of the club what he found most interesting. California, he says, will spread itself at our coming World's Fair.

C. Young & Sons Co. are very busy now in their plant and seed department with heavy mail orders. Dickman, Plant Seed Co., and Schisler-Corneli Seed Co. are having some heavy orders to fill and all hands are kept busy all day long.

Bowling.

The League team ended the bowling season by winning two out of three games from the leaders of the race, the great Enterprise team. The Florist team is now located in fifth place, and but for the crippled condition of the team during the last twelve games we would now be the leaders in the race. Friday night the team had only four men, and Beneke, with crippled foot, had to take part and help win the two games.

The scores were:

NEW GLADIOLUS.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a single flower of Gladiolus "1900," which is being introduced this year by John Fay Kennell, Rochester, N. Y. The color is a very rich shade of red with prominent white spots on the three lower petals, making it very showy from a distance.

Mr. Kennell has found it a very strong grower with an abundance of dark green foliage, growing about 3½ to 4½ feet high, with a good stiff flower spike. It is a medium to late bloomer, the season of blooming from a single planting being quite lengthy, as the bulbs usually send up from two to four flower spikes. It has been found to increase rapidly, both from bulbs and bulblets, and the bulbs are good keepers.

The stiff flower spike enables it to withstand high winds much better than some others, and the flowers keep well after being cut. It should prove useful as a cut flower as well as a fine bedder.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Up to last Saturday conditions remained the same as reported in last issue, with supply ample in all lines and only the fanciest stock reaching top quotations. Then the effect of the cold wave became apparent, and at present writing the supply is short, especially in roses, and prices are pretty close to Easter quotations for the best grades.

The chances of a good supply for Easter are dependent wholly upon the weather. Should we have a break in the present cold and have a stretch of favorable weather from now on the supply will undoubtedly be satisfactory. If present conditions continue, which seems hardly likely at this season, the shortage will be serious. There is bound to be a shortage in lilies anyway. Anyone desiring to be sure of their lilies had better get their orders in early.

As to prices for Easter, the quotations of the Chicago Wholesale Cut Flower Association, on page 561 of this issue, represent the combined opinions of fifteen of the wholesale houses. These prices are, of course, not absolute, and it is not expected that they will be rigidly adhered to. Prices will be determined by the supply and demand. But they represent the best judgment of the houses represented at this date.

Referring to the lily situation, Mr. E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., says he recently visited a dozen lily growers and an average of their crops shows that 40 per cent of the bulbs was a total loss in the first place, and of what is left 60 per cent of the flowers will be second quality.

The Fall Exhibition.

The annual fall exhibition will be of more than usual interest this year on account of the co-operation of the Chrysanthemum Society of America. The premium list is now in preparation and will soon be issued. Many valuable prizes are offered, and among them we note that the silver cup of the Chrysanthemum Society of America is offered for best ten blooms of one variety. The prizes for vase of one hundred blooms, one or more varieties, are: First, $50; second, $40; third, $30.

For chysanthemum plants prizes of $15 and $10 are offered for single specimens, the colors indicated being white, yellow, pink and any other color, and additional premiums of $15 and $10 are offered for best plant entered in the classes named. The prizes in all the plant classes seem to have been materially increased, also in roses and other cut flowers.

Various Items.

Mr. James Hartshorne, of the Chicago Carnation Company, states that their business in general has been very satisfactory this season, running nearly a hundred per cent ahead of last year. They have already let the contract to increase their plant to a size half as large again as the present one, for roses, adding about 40,000 ft. more of glass. In addition they will open a large sales place in Chicago.

Miss Grace Clark, daughter of William Clark, Colorado Springs, Colo., spent a few weeks in Chicago, and while here did Prince Henry the honor to attend the ball given him at the Auditorium.

During his recent trip east, John Degnan, of the McKellar & Winterson Company, secured a large supply of flower and vegetable seeds from the firm of R. & J. Farquhar & Co., Boston, for the retail department of his house, and he is now busily engaged in getting out a retail seed catalogue.

Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Bassett have returned from Florida, where they spent the winter.

John Bertermann and wife, Indianapolis, were recent visitors. Also Chas. Siebrecht, Winona, Minn.

Mr. John Thorpe was in Kansas City last week conferring with Mr. Taggart regarding the exhibition of 1902.

Bowling.

The Florists' Bowling League finished their series of 60 games on Tuesday evening, the Wholesalers winning three straight from the Retailers, and the Growers defeating the Miscellaneous three straight. The result of the contest leaves the Wholesalers and Growers tied for first place. It was decided to play off the tie after Easter. The scores on Tuesday were as follows:

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Up to Thursday of last week business had a tendency to drag. Even carnations, which have been the mainstay with us all of this season, remain unsold. Fancy grades were hard to move and consequently the price was forced down to 2c for good ones. Roses, on the contrary, were scarce, and met a very good demand. They all sold, little and big, at good prices.

Luckily this condition of the market did not last long, as the latter portion of the week brought forth very good trade, both home and shipping. Carnations regained what they had lost in price and some very good ones reached 4 cents, which is the top price for some time back. Roses came in in better supply, but still not enough to fill all orders. Both in roses and carnations, white was the color most in demand. It is too bad that so many of the white carnations come with bursted calyxes, as it reduces their value almost one-half.

Bulbous stock was about the same as last week—very slow demand, with tulips almost a glut. They could not be moved at any price. Although there was a big demand for white flowers, still Romans and narcissus were the last flowers called for. Bulbous stock are truly Easter flowers, and it is then that the growers of this class of stock reap their harvest.

Violets arrived in vast numbers and were sold in job lots at low figures. Single varieties had the call; double ones were almost a drug.

St. Patrick's Day brought quite a lively demand for stock, and most everything was cleaned out. Green carnations, Romans, narcissus, etc., were to be seen in some of the stores. They had been dipped in a green dye. It is carrying things pretty far when one has to dye his flowers in order to get trade.

I saw some of the carnations grown at Mr. W. A. Procter's private place, a few days ago, and they were truly the best carnations grown in this vicinity, everything taken into consideration. Fine, large flowers, borne on long, stiff stems, and in all the leading fancy varieties. A visit to these greenhouses shows the plants in the best of shape, and it is not to be wondered at that they produce such blooms.

An attractive Easter novelty to be seen here is bulbous stock, such as tulips and Dutch, planted in small boxes and trimmed with a Porto Rican mat. They make a nice show, and, better still, sell well.

Easter prices are as follows: Brides, Bridesmaids, Meteors, ordinary grades, 4c to 6c; best stock, 7c to 12c. Carnations, fancy, 5c to 6c; medium, 4c to 5c; ordinary, 3c to 4c. Dutch hyacinths, 4c, 5c and 6c. Valley, 4c and 5c. Narcissus, 3c and 4c. Romans, 3c and 4c. Tulips, single, 3c, 4c and 5c; double, 4c, 5c and 6c, best varieties. Harrisii, 15c, 18c and 20c per bloom. Daffodils and Von Sion, 4c. Violets, single and double, 75c to $1 per 100. Eastern ferns, 25c a 100, $2.50 a 1,000. Galax leaves, $1 to $1.50 a 1,000. Leucothoe, 50c to 75c a 100. Adiantum, $1 to $1.50 a 100. Asparagus, cut sprays, 50c to 75c a bunch. Everything points to a large supply and fine trade.

FOR EASTER

CUT STRINGS, 8 FEET LONG, 50 cts. each.
Shipped to any part of the country.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

We have been experiencing summer weather the fore part of the week, 60 degrees in the shade, and the latter part down to 8 degrees, with a regular blizzard on tap. The warm weather brought flowers out at a rapid rate, but, strange to say, the heavier the crop, the larger the demand. If the present severe weather continues there will be a scarcity of all kinds of flowers except bulbous.

The lily crop is only fair. A large percentage of the plants will miss Easter and of those that will be in bloom some have stems from 6 to 10 inches long. Roses will be more nearly equal to demand than any other kind of flower. There will be a fine lot of Ramblers in pots, Deutzia gracilis, American Beauties, Paris daisies and violets, beside bulb stock and lilies, so that the public will have plenty to select from.

At present prices are: Roses, $1 to $1.50 per doz.; American Beauties, $1.50 to $5 per doz.; carnations, 35 to 50 cents per doz; Easter and calla lilies, $2 per doz.; valley, tulips and hyacinths, 50 cents per doz. The prospects for a glorious Easter were never brighter.

James Taylor, of Mt. Clemens, and Frank Beard and Mr. Dunn, of Detroit, were in town Saturday. They were shown the principal establishments by Henry Smith and G. F. Crabb. They were surprised at both quality of stock grown and the extent of glass devoted to the cultivation of plants and flowers.

Mr. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., was here Saturday booking orders for Easter supplies. G. F. C.

SAN FRANCISCO.

San Francisco and surrounding towns were visited recently by a very severe wind and rain storm that played havoc with trees, plants and greenhouse property. March came in like a lion, the wind swept along at a great rate, blowing the face off everybody, including the town clock. As a result business has suffered to some extent. Some of the stores have been very busy with funeral work, the great standby of the business.

A few big weddings have taken place the past week, the leader being the Hopkins affair. Jones, on Sutter street, had charge of the decorations and turned out many beautiful arrangements. Store windows the past week have been very gay with a plentiful supply of tulips and hyacinths in various colors. The continuing rains are beginning to effect the color of violets, those now coming in being very much faded.

E. W. McLellan is cutting some of the finest Lawsons seen in this market for a long time.

Mr. Erick Erickson, lately with the Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago, has secured a position with the Realty Syndicate, Oakland, Cal. When Mr. Erickson left Chicago he promised to be gone about six months. His Chicago friends ought to hear him talking now. I am willing to wager he is here for good, and to use his own words, "A hae yan good yob," is proof that he is satisfied.

Mr. William Wallace Saunders, the bulb specialist, was married to Miss Jessie B. Emery February 14. Mr. Saunders had made many plans for his wedding day, but luck seemed to be against him. In the first place early on the morning of his marriage he rented a cozy cottage up town, this he thought was furnished and in it he intended the ceremony should be performed. But toward the afternoon Mr. S. visited the house and to his dismay found it without furniture of any kind. He sought the counsel of his friends and a wagon was started out on a collecting trip, and by contributions from a number of his friends the cottage was furnished by dark and decorated for the wedding. The guests arrived—so did the minister, and it was time for Saunders to claim his bride. The minister asked for the marriage license and then for the first time Saunders remembered he had forgotten the important document. He bolted from the room without a word of explanation; only the bride and minister knew why he had gone. Saunders went to hunt up the county clerk. It was nearly midnight when he returned to complete the wedding ceremony. In the meantime the guests had not been told what the trouble was and many thought he had run away. At the wedding supper explanations were made, while Saunders yawned. The florists who did not attend the wedding of Mr. W. W. Saunders missed a pantomime.

ST. PAUL.

Among the Growers.

One of the largest, if not the very largest, strictly wholesale establishments in the Northwest is that of the Minneapolis Floral Company, located at 36th street, and Calhoun boulevard, Minneapolis. This place was started in the fall of 1900 and already contains 75,000 square feet of glass. John Monson, prominently identified with the trade for several years, is the manager and part owner of this establishment, the other member of the concern being Mr. Moulton, a prominent banker of the city.

The houses are built on a gently-sloping southern declivity, an ideal place for growing flowers. Five connecting houses, each 15x155, are devoted to carnations; nine connecting, 30x155, to roses; one, 20x155, to palms and ferns; one, 25x155, just completed, to spring bedding stock; one, 20x155, to Easter stock, and one, 35x250, to a general line of blooming plants, etc. Five small sash houses, containing from 3,000 to 4,000 square feet of glass, are devoted to violets, forget-me-nots and other cool-grown stock.

In carnations Mr. Monson is an enthusiast over Prosperity, which he is propagating in large quantities for another season's trade. He has 600 plants benched this season and considers it the most profitable sort he grows. The bloom is extra large, very seldom bursting, a favorite with buyers, a magnificent keeper and all-around good flower. The plant is strong, clean and vigorous and an early and continuous cropper. The only weak point in this grand variety is its stem, and Mr. Monson hopes to correct this by lowering the benches and giving more head room.

Lawson is another variety which does well here, but produces fewer blooms than Prosperity. Golden Beauty is a very beautiful and promising yellow. California is not as good, though a fine variety. Queen Louise is a beautiful white. Norway and Lorna are both promising. White Cloud and Flora Hill are still the standard whites. Marquis has done well here. Ethel Crocker is a fine full flower, but a very shy bloomer. Daybreak is still grown to good advantage, its small size being its poorest feature.

In reds Estelle is the most distinct color we have yet seen. Crane and Jubilee are the main crop this season. Gov. Roosevelt is a most beautiful dark crimson, an improvement over Maceo and Gomez. Mrs. Bradt and Armazindy complete the list of varieties grown here.

In roses, Bride, Bridesmaid and Meteor are grown for main crop. Sunset also does well here, and an occasional plant of Perle shows that old but almost discarded variety to good advantage. Liberty has not thriven as well here as at some places. Some fine blooms have been cut, but the crops are far between and it cannot be called a profitable variety for general cultivation. Golden Gate is another variety which has been disappointing here, there being but few blooms.

His Beauties are looking remarkably strong and healthy, but on account of being planted too close in the benches are not throwing as many long-stemmed blooms as they should. Queen of Edgely, the Pink Beauty, is grown to perfection here. It is, if anything, a more rampant grower than its parent and a freer bloomer, but to my mind it lacks substance and will never take the place of the Red Beauty. A nice stock of Helen Gould is being propagated and grown for next season's planting.

A fine lot of Manetti was ready for grafting, though Mr. Monson is a firm believer in stock grown on its own roots. He attributes clubroot to the drying out of the roots when the plants are small. For growing Meteor he uses clay and gravel and little or no fertilizer, as he thinks this variety thrives best and produces the best blooms when starved.

His rose houses are all built with the short span to the south, 16x20 glass and iron gutters being used. The gutters are seven feet from the ground, making the houses large and light.

Mr. Monson will discontinue growing palms, as he finds them unprofitable. He has a fine lot of several hundred hydrangeas in fine condition for Easter trade. His lilies are badly diseased, both longiflorum and Harrisii. Azaleas, pæonias, hybrid roses, Crimson Ramblers, etc., are also in fine condition. Violets are grown in raised beds and are doing finely, though some clubroot has appeared in the Marie Louise.

A full line of florists' supplies is also carried by this firm, as well as canaries, cages, etc.

The plant will be largely increased the coming summer and plans are made for enlarging and improving the heating plant as well.

The products of this establishment are sold throughout the Northwest, though most of them find a ready sale right at home with the storekeepers of the Twin Cities. X. Y. Z.

We learn from the introduction that the department has in manuscript a list of all the varieties of vegetables sold by American seedsmen and that the list of peppers is an extract from same.

JOSEPH HEACOCK, Wyncote, Pa.

Gladiolus Seedling No. 1900.

A fine commercial sort, very showy. See illustration in this issue.

MR. WM. SCOTT, Supt. of Floriculture at Pan-American, says of it:

"It gives me much pleasure to state that I think it is one of the most wonderful and useful commercial varieties ever sent out. Its coloring is most brilliant, the spike is grand, and its keeping qualities I proved to be the very best. I consider it as fine a florists' Gladiolus as I have yet seen, and should, of course, be in every amateur collection. It must become most popular."

BUFFALO, N. Y., March 7th, 1902.

MR. JOHN FAY KENNELL, Box 405, Rochester, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Am sorry to hear you are going to introduce your Red Seedling "1900" this spring to the public. Have handled it for you, in fact, all your Gladiolus, and consider it one of your best varieties—an excellent seller for its color, and keeping qualities are fine. Sorry to see it go to everybody to grow, as I should like to have the handling of the whole output of same.

Yours respectfully, W. F. KASTING.

Price, No. 1 size, $1.00 per doz., postpaid; $4.50 per 100 by express, not prepaid.
